DECLARATION OF JENNIFER PODKUL IN SUPPORT OF COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

I, Jennifer Podkul, Esq., make the following declaration based on my personal knowledge, and declare under penalty of perjury pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1746 that the following is true and correct:

1. I am the director of policy at Kids in Need of Defense (KIND). KIND is a national non-profit organization with ten field offices providing free legal services to unaccompanied immigrant children who face removal proceedings in Immigration Court. Since 2009, KIND has received referrals for over 15,800 children from 70 countries, and has partnered with pro bono counsel at over 500 law firms, corporations, law schools, and bar associations. KIND also advocates for changes in law, policy, and practice to enhance protections for unaccompanied children. Since 2010, KIND has also run a return and reintegration program for children who return to their country of origin.

2. KIND has served children who arrived in the United States with parents from whom they were separated by federal officials.
- 1 3. During interviews with children, KIND staff seek to determine whether children entered 2 the country with parents from whom they were separated, and will inquire into the 3 circumstances.
- 4 4. Several children have reported experiencing distress and confusion at being separated 5 from parents. For example, a seven-year-old girl reported crying throughout two days 6 spent in a Border Patrol holding facility, and asking to be reunited with her mother. Other 7 children have reported worrying about their parents, because they did not know what 8 happened to them after the separation.
- 9 5. Through our work representing the children in legal proceedings, as well as supporting 10 those who return to the country of origin, it is evident to KIND that there is no consistent 11 policy for ensuring communication among separated children and parents. Some 12 children served by KIND were allowed to communicate with parents by telephone after 13 separation. In other cases, children reported that the government did not allow any 14 communication with a parent while the child was in detention, or that children did not 15 know the whereabouts of their parents.
- 16 6. In order to provide adequate legal representation to children in removal proceedings, it is 17 important for the attorney to have a thorough understanding of the child's situation in the 18 PODKUL DECLARATION country of origin. Attorneys must ask difficult questions about abuse, abandonment, neglect, violence, persecution, or other harms suffered by children and their families in the country of origin. Children may qualify for humanitarian protection on several grounds, and past harm to the child or to family members may support eligibility for legal relief. A child may have limited memory and understanding of complex or violent situations, making it important for the attorney to speak with members of a child's family who may corroborate information, fill in gaps, and provide additional facts the child might not know or comprehend.
- 19 2:18-CV-00939
- 20 21 22 23

7. Children who were separated from their parents following DHS apprehension may not know where the parent is or how to contact them. Parents of KIND clients may be held in the custody of Immigration and Customs Enforcement or the U.S. Marshall, or may even be back in the country of origin before the child begins working with an attorney.
8. Separation from parents makes it harder for the child to provide the evidence necessary to prove their defense from removal. Many times, the parent has important paperwork, such as notarized affidavits, birth certificates, or police records. Obtaining these documents from a parent who is detained or deported is difficult and resource-intensive.
9. KIND's Return and Reintegration Project has worked with several children who were separated from their parents following apprehension, and sought voluntary departure from the Immigration Judge in order to reunite with a parent and return together to their country of origin. In several such cases, the government was unable to coordinate the return of the parent and child, and the children had to face the return journey alone.

Several of these cases involved very young children.

10. When a child is separated from a parent and rendered unaccompanied, the child's legal case is generally severed from the parent's. Under the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008, unaccompanied alien children are entitled to be heard in removal proceedings before an Immigration Judge. A separated child has his or her own removal case, separate from the parent's matter, which may be expedited and may not be referred to the Immigration Court. Thus, the child's and parent's cases may proceed as two separate matters, often in different tribunals and on very different schedules, although the family members may share in common underlying facts, claims for relief, and evidence.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Executed in Washington, D.C., on June 30, 2018.

DECLARATION OF CHARLES ALBERT DUTCH
RUPPERSBERGER III IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFF STATES

Defendants.

I, Charles Albert Dutch Ruppertsberger III, declare as follows:

- I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.
 - On June 19, 2018, I visited the Ordinance Road Detention Center in Glen Burnie, Maryland, which contracts with U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement to hold detained migrants, most of whom are awaiting court proceedings or deportation. I made the visit with Rep. Donald Beyer, a colleague of mine in the House of Representatives. Our visit was reported by the Washington Post and other news outlets. See, e.g., Patricia Sullivan, Md., Va. congressmen hear stories of family separation, Wash. Post, June 21, 2018, at B4, available at https://www.washingtonpost.com/local/immigration/md-va-congressmen-hear-stories-of-family-separation/2018/06/20/af3fe0ae-74aa-11e8-b4b7-308400242c2e_story.html?noredirect&utm_term=.fa6d5bb19919.

1 3. During our visit, I met two men who had had their children taken from them by federal 2 immigration officials under the Trump Administration's family separation policy. Both had to 3 wait for weeks to hear from their children again.

4 4. One man—whom the Washington Post referred to as Carlos—fled Honduras after gang
 5 violence in that country threatened his life and that of his 7-year-old son. Carlos fled with his 6 son by train and was arrested by federal officers on March 10, 2018, when they crossed the U.S.
 7 border into El Paso, Texas. Carlos told me that he sought asylum and yet was held in leg irons
 8 for several days, with his son by his side. Then his son was removed. Three months passed
 9 before Carlos was able to speak to his son again. At that time, his son was being housed in a 10 care facility located in Michigan.

11 5. Carlos had the foresight to make his son memorize a relative's phone number before they 12 left Honduras. As a result, his son was able to contact the relative, who connected him to another 13 family member in the United States. Carlos still did not know when he would be able to see his 14 son again.

15 6. The second man—whom the Washington Post referred to as Mario—also fled Honduras, 16 by bus, accompanied by his sister and his 5-year-old daughter. Mario told me that his sister was 17 a victim of domestic violence committed by a police officer in Honduras. When the family
 18 attempted to press charges, a gang beat Mario up.

19 7. Mario, his daughter, and his sister surrendered to U.S. Customs and Border Patrol on 20 April 20. Mario told me that he and his sister had both sought asylum. According to Mario, his 21 sister was ultimately granted asylum, but he and his daughter were placed in an ICE holding 22 facility. Conditions in the facility were difficult; the room in which they were kept was frigid 23 and little more than a prison cell. After three days, Mario told us, an officer approached him and 24 told him to give up his daughter or she would be taken away. Mario told us that his 5-year-old
 25 girl was dragged away from him crying and screaming, which was the last he saw her. Mario 26

1 told us that he finally heard from his daughter in mid-June but he still did not know where she 2 was being held.

3 8. Mario and Carlos both told us that they were seeking asylum in the United States and 4 that they had entered the country through legitimate points of entry. Neither knew where in the 5 asylum process their cases stood.

6 9. Both men visibly struggled to maintain their composure while recounting the trauma that 7 they experienced since coming to the United States and ultimately broke down into tears. Our 8 interpreter too broke down into tears, finding their stories too painful to bear.

9 10. Carlos and Mario told us that a third man who had been separated from his children under 10 the Trump Administration's policy was also being held in the facility but we were not able to 11 speak with him during my visit. In response to our questions, ICE officials indicated that they 12 did not know how many parents they were holding who had been separated from their children
13 under the Administration's policy.

14 11. I have asked ICE officials whether detainees or children were being held in Maryland.
15 ICE officials have confirmed that parents and children separated from one another pursuant to 16 the Trump Administration's family separation policy are being kept in child care and detention 17 centers in Maryland.

18 I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

NO. 2:18-CV-00939

Plaintiff,

DECLARATION OF FRANCISCO
SERRANO IN SUPPORT OF
PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR
EXPEDITED DISCOVERY

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
et al.,

Defendants.

I, Francisco Serrano, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of the facts herein. If called as a witness, I could and would testify competently to the matters set forth below.

2. I reside in the District of Columbia. I live with my wife, my mother, and my two children who are fifteen- and seventeen-years-old.

3. In May 2018, my niece Maria called me to tell me that she had traveled from El Salvador with a caravan, that she was at the Mexico-United States border and that she was going to cross the border by San Ysidro. She also told me that she was traveling with her two children, M. who is 7 years old and N. who is 2 years old.

4. Approximately a week later I received a call from a shelter indicating that the children were going to be separated from Maria, that they were on their way to New York, that Maria had designated me as a sponsor and asking me whether I was willing to be the sponsor. I

1 told the person that I would be the sponsor and then the person told me that I would be able to 2 talk to the children twice a week. Attached hereto as Exhibits 1 and 2 are the forms I was told 3 to complete in early May 2018 so that I could receive Maria's two sons.

4 5. I have spoken with the seven-year-old on several occasions since the family
 5 arrived. He told me that officials told him that he and his baby brother were being taken to a 6 detention center in Washington, D.C. to be closer to me, their uncle. I received a phone call from 7 the seven-year-old who thought he was in Washington, D.C., but he was not. He was in New 8 York. I was told by a social worker that the two young boys are in Lutheran Youth Hostel of 9 New York.

10 6. To become the sponsor the social worker told me that I had to provide: 1) Maria's 11 mother's birth certificate, 2) Maria's birth certificate, 3) the kids' birth certificates, and 4) my 12 birth certificate, driver's license, passport and proof of citizenship. In addition to completing the 13 paperwork, I had to provide copies of my identification and police record. I did not have copies
 14 of Maria's mother's, Maria's or the kids' birth certificates so I had to ask persons in El Salvador
 15 to send them to me. This process took 5 days because a friend was in El Salvador and was able 16 to help me, otherwise the process would have taken 15 to 20 days.

17 7. The social worker who was working with the kids told me that once I submitted 18 the documents she would get approval within 36 hours and the children would be released within 19 24 hours after that. I did not hear from them within 36 hours, but I assumed that everything was 20 valid because I had completed all of the forms and followed all of the instructions.

21 8. Approximately one week after I provided the paperwork I was told that I had to 22 be fingerprinted. The next day I took time off work and got fingerprinted.

23 9. After I submitted all the requested documents the social worker told me that she 24 was very sorry but that she had only been able to get one of the approvals she needed to approve 25 the paperwork. She said that she did everything she could but it was out of her hands.

1 10. In late May 2018, I received a power of attorney from my niece Maria giving me
 2 the authorization to care for her two minor sons. A copy of the notarized power of attorney is 3 attached hereto as Exhibit 3. I provided a copy of this power of attorney to the social worker in 4 early June 2018.

5 11. About a week later I was asked to complete a certified form for a further 6 background check. On June 1, 2018, I completed the additional form that Lutheran Social 7 Services had provided to me to get authorization to receive Maria's two sons. I had to have the 8 form notarized. A copy of that form is attached hereto as Exhibit 4.

9 12. Then I was informed that I passed the background check but they needed one 10 more week to release the kids to me. The seven-year-old boy called me and told me that 11 officials had told him that he and his brother would be released to me in a week.

12 13. But then, I was told that they needed to perform a DNA test to confirm that 13 Maria is the children's mom. Recently, the social worker told me that a few days ago a 14 government employee went to Otay Mesa where Maria was detained to conduct the DNA test
 15 but that Maria was not there. Later, when I spoke to Maria she said that she had been at Otay 16 Mesa the entire time.

17 14. Several weeks after I submitted all of the paperwork, on June 22, 2018, I was 18 told that the paperwork I submitted was wrong, the power of attorney was not valid, and the 19 boys would not be released to me. The social worker said that we will have to start the 20 sponsorship process again because the rules changed. She said that there were new forms we 21 had to complete, but she did not send me the forms until Friday, June 29, 2018. Those forms 22 are attached hereto as Exhibits 5 and 6.

23 15. On June 27 after borrowing money from family members, I was able to gather 24 $10,000 to post Maria's bond. An immigration agent told me that Maria would come out on 25 June 28, 2018 and that she would be taken to the bus station so she could take the bus to 26 Washington, D.C. So Maria's bus ticket was for June 28. But immigration released her on

1 June 27 and Maria called me because the agents left her in a McDonald's and she did not have 2 any place to go or to sleep. She had to look for someone to take her in for one night and now
 3 she is on the way to Washington, D.C.

4 16. On June 28, 2018, I talked to the social worker who told me that we will have to 5 start the sponsorship process again and that Maria will have to fill the application and request 6 the children because she already was released from immigration detention.

7 17. I am concerned that now the process for Maria's children to be reunited with my 8 family will have to start all over again. Everyone in my home, including my 78-year-old 9 mother, will have to submit fingerprints, police records, and identification, and we will have to 10 complete a new application form. Because of my mother's age, it is difficult to get her 11 fingerprints, and immigration officials previously told her that she would not have to submit 12 fingerprints again. I was told that my niece Maria will also have to be fingerprinted and will 13 have to submit all the documentation, as well. I am concerned that Maria will not be able to 14 produce the right paperwork to be reunited with her sons. Maria does not have a passport, and 15 all she has is an ID card from El Salvador.

16 18. All this process has been very difficult for my family:

17 a. At first when I would talk to M., the 7-year-old, he was very talkative and 18 excited because the social worker told him he would be out within a week. When the time came 19 that M. expected to be released and nothing happened he sounded depressed, he would not say
 20 much and wanted to cry. M. asked me why I had not picked him up yet. The social worker told 21 me that M. is depressed and asked me for words of encouragement to cheer him up. Yesterday, 22 June 28, I spoke with him and he is glad because he thinks that soon he is going to be reunited 23 with his mother. I am worried about M.'s mental health when he learns that we have to start the 24 process again and that he is not going to be released soon.

25 b. Because I am only able to speak on the phone and N. is too young, I have 26 not been able to speak with him at all. M. told me that N. cries all the time, and that the only

1 time that the kids see each other is at night. M. told me that they let N. stay with him at night
2 because he is the only one with whom N. won't cry.

3 c. When I speak with Maria she asks for an update about the children and is 4 speechless when I tell her that I am still waiting for approval. She cries. She has only been able 5 to speak with the kids a few times.

6 d. The most affected person by all this is my mother. She raised Maria after 7 her mother died when Maria was 8 months old. At first, I did not want to tell my mom what was 8 happening because she is 78 years old and I was concerned that the news would adversely impact 9 her health. I only told her that Maria and the kids had crossed the border but were detained.
10 After watching news, my mom demanded I tell her what was happening. My mom became ill
11 when I told her that the kids had been separated from Maria. Ever since my mom found out 12 about the family separation, she has had an intense headache and I had to take her to see a doctor.
13 I am really concerned about my mom's health. For Maria, the separation from her kids repeats 14 the story as when she lost her mother.

15 e. On my part, this process has been very depressive and frustrating. When 16 I finally thought that they were going to give me the children they tell me no. I have also had to 17 take time off work to do all that has been asked of me.

18 19 19. I am hopeful that Maria, M. and N. will be reunited soon.

20 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California and the laws
21 of the United States that the foregoing is true and correct.

22 Dated this 30th day of June 2018 in Washington D.C.

DECLARACIÓN DE FRANCISCO
SERRANO EN APOYO A PETICIÓN
DE LOS DEMANDANTES PARA
EXHIBICIÓN DE PRUEBAS
ACELERADA

14 Yo, Francisco Serrano, declaro lo siguiente:
15

16 1. Tengo más de 18 años de edad y tengo conocimiento personal de los hechos en 17 este documento. Si se me llamara como testigo, podría y testificaría de manera competente a las 18 cuestiones que se exponen a continuación.

19 2. Yo resido en el Distrito de Columbia. Vivo con mi esposa, mi mamá, y mis dos 20 hijos que tienen quince y diecisiete años de edad.

21 3. En mayo de 2018, mi sobrina María me llamó para decirme que había viajado
22 desde El Salvador con una caravana, que estaba en la frontera de México y los Estados Unidos,
23 y que iba a cruzar la frontera por San Ysidro. También me dijo que estaba viajando con sus dos 24 niños, M. de 7 años de edad y N. de 2 años de edad.

25 4. Aproximadamente una semana después recibí una llamada de un albergue
26 diciéndome que los niños iban a ser separados de María, que iban rumbo a Nueva York, que

1 María me había designado como patrocinador y preguntándome que si yo estaba dispuesto a
 2 ser el patrocinador. Yo le dije a la persona que sería el patrocinador y la persona me dijo que
 3 yo podría hablar con los niños dos veces por semana. Adjunto los Documentos 1 y 2 son los 4 formularios que me dijeron que completara a principios de mayo para que pudiera recibir a los 5 niños de María.

6 5. Yo he hablado con el niño de 7 años en varias ocasiones desde que la familia
 7 llegó. Él me dijo que oficiales le dijeron que a él y a su hermanito los iban a llevar a un centro
 8 de detención en Washington, D.C. para estar más cerca de mí, sus tío. Recibí una llamada del
 9 niño de siete años quien pensaba que estaba en Washington, D.C., pero no era así. Él estaba en
 10 Nueva York. Una trabajadora social me dijo que los dos niños están Lutheran Youth Hostel en 11 Nueva York.

12 6. Para ser el patrocinador la trabajadora social me dijo que tenía que proveer: 1) el 13 acta de nacimiento de la mamá de María, 2) el acta de nacimiento de María, 3) las actas de 14 nacimiento de los niños, y 4) mi acta de nacimiento, licencia de conducir, pasaporte y pruebas
 15 de ciudadanía. Además de completar el papeleo, tuve que proporcionar copias de mi
 16 identificación y registro policial. Yo no tenía copias de las actas de nacimiento de la mamá de
 17 María, de María o de los niños así es que tuve que contactar a personas en El Salvador para que
 18 me las enviaran. Este proceso tomó 5 días porque un amigo estaba en El Salvador y me pudo 19 ayudar, si no, el proceso hubiera durado de 15 a 20 días.

20 7. La trabajadora social que estaba trabajando con los niños me dijo que cuando yo 21 entregara los documentos ella obtendría aprobación en 36 horas y los niños saldrían 24 horas
 22 después de eso. No escuché de ellos en las próximas 36 horas, pero asumí que todo era válido 23 porque ya había completado todos los formularios y seguido todas las instrucciones.

24 8. Aproximadamente una semana después que proporcione el papeleo me dijeron 25 que me tenían que tomar la huellas. El día siguiente pedí tiempo en mi trabajo y me tomaron las 26 huellas.

1 9. Después de que entregué los documentos que me pidieron la trabajadora social
 2 me dijo que lo sentía mucho pero que solo había obtenido una de las aprobaciones que necesitaba
 3 para aprobar el papeleo. Ella dijo que hizo todo lo posible pero que estaba fuera de sus manos.

4 10. A finales de mayo, recibí un poder legal de mi sobrina María dándome la
 5 autorización para cuidar de sus dos niños menores. Una copia del poder legal notariado esta
 6 adjunta como Documento 3. Yo proporcioné el poder legal a la trabajadora social a principios 7 de junio.

8 11. Aproximadamente una semana después me pidieron que completara una forma
 9 certificada para una verificación de antecedentes adicional. El primero de junio de 2018, yo
 10 completé el formulario que me proporciono Lutheran Social Services para obtener la 11 autorización de recibir a los dos hijos de María. Tuve que certificar el formulario por notario.
 12 Una copia del formulario esta adjunto como Documento 4.

13 12. Luego me informaron que pasé la verificación de antecedentes, pero necesitaban 14 una semana más para entregarme a los niños. Hablé con el niño de siete años y me dijo que los 15 oficiales le dijeron que a él y su hermano me los iban a entregar en una semana.

16 13. Pero luego me dijeron que necesitaban hacer una prueba de ADN para confirmar
 17 que María es la mamá de los niños. Recientemente, la trabajadora social me dijo que hace unos
 18 días un empleado del gobierno fue a Otay Mesa donde María estaba detenida para tomarle la
 19 prueba de ADN pero María no estaba ahí. Después, cuando hablé con María ella dijo que había 20 estado en Otay Mesa todo el tiempo.

21 14. El 22 de junio, varias semanas después que entregué todo el papeleo me dijeron
 22 que el papeleo que entregué estaba equivocado, que el poder legal no era válido, y que no me
 23 iban a entregar a los niños. Ella dijo que hay formularios nuevos que tenemos que completar, 24 pero no me envió los formularios hasta el viernes, 29 de junio de 2018. Esos formularios están
 25 adjuntos como Documentos 5 y 6.

1 15. El 27 de junio después de pedir dinero prestado a miembros de mi familia, pude
 2 recolectar $10,000 y pagué la fianza de María. Un agente de inmigración me dijo que María
 3 saldría el 28 de junio de 2018 y que la llevarían a estación de autobús para que ella pudiera tomar
 4 el autobús a Washington D.C. Así es que el boleto de autobús de María estaba para la fecha del
 5 28 de junio. Pero inmigración liberó a María el 27 de junio y María me llamó porque los agentes
 6 la dejaron en un McDonald's y ella no tenía a donde ir ni dormir. Ella tuvo que buscar a alguien
 7 que la alojara una noche y ahora está en camino hacia Washington D.C.

8 16. El 28 de junio de 2018, hablé con la trabajadora social quien me dijo que 9 tendremos que empezar el proceso de y que María tendrá que llenar la aplicación y pedir a los 10 niños porque ya salió de detención de inmigración.

11 17. Estoy preocupado que ahora tendremos que empezar de nuevo el proceso para
 12 reunir a los niños de María con mi familia. Todos en mi casa, incluyendo mi mamá de 78 años
 13 de edad, tendrán que someter huellas, registro policial, e identificación, y tendremos que
 14 completar un nuevo formulario. Debido a la edad de mi mamá, es difícil tomarle las huellas, y
 15 oficiales de inmigración me dijeron anteriormente que ella no tendría que someterse a las huellas
 16 de nuevo. También me informaron que María tendrá que tomarse las huellas y tendrá que
 17 presentar toda la documentación. Estoy preocupado de que María no pueda producir el papeleo
 18 necesario para poder reunirse con sus dos hijos. María no tiene pasaporte, y todo lo que tiene es 19 tu tarjeta de identificación de El Salvador.

20 18. Todo este proceso ha sido muy difícil para mi familia:

21 a. Al principio cuando hablaba con M., el niño de 7 años, él estaba muy 22 platicador y estaba emocionado porque la trabajadora social le dijo que saldría en una semana.
 23 Cuando el tiempo cuando M. esperaba salir llegó y nada pasó, él se escuchaba depresivo, no
 24 decía mucho y quería llorar. Me preguntó por qué no he venido por él todavía. La trabajadora
 25 social me dijo que M. estaba depresivo y me pidió palabras para animarlo. El 28 de junio hablé
 26 con él y está contento porque piensa que pronto va a reunirse con su mamá. Estoy más

1 preocupado por la salud mental de M. cuando se entere que tendremos que empezar el proceso
2 de nuevo y que no va a salir pronto.

3 b. Porque solo puedo hablar por teléfono y N. es muy pequeño no he podido
4 hablar con él. M. me dijo que N. llora todo el tiempo, y el único momento en que los dos niños
5 se ven es en la noche. M. dijo que dejan que N. se quede con M. por la noche porque es lo único
6 que hará que N. deje de llorar

7 c. Cuando hablo con María ella me pregunta que está pasando con los niños
8 y se queda sin palabras cuando le digo que todavía estoy esperando la aprobación. Ella llora.
9 Ella solamente ha podido hablar con los niños pocas veces.

10 d. La más afectada por todo esto es mi mamá. Ella crió a María después que
11 su mamá murió cuando María tenía 8 meses de edad. Al principio, yo no quería decirle a mi
12 mamá lo que estaba pasando porque ella tiene 78 años de edad y estaba preocupado que si le
13 decía se iba a poner mal de salud. Yo solo le dije que María y los niños habían cruzado la
14 frontera, pero estaban detenidos. Después de ver las noticias, mi mamá exigió que le dijera que
15 estaba pasando. Mi mamá se puso mal de salud cuando le dije que los niños habían sido
16 separados de María. Desde que mi mamá se enteró de la separación familiar ha tenido un dolor
17 de cabeza intenso y yo tuve que llevarla al doctor. Estoy muy preocupado por la salud de mi
18 mamá. Para María, la separación de sus niños repite la historia de cuando ella perdió a su mamá.

19 e. Por mi parte, este proceso ha sido muy depresivo y frustrante. Cuando al
20 fin pensaba que me iban a dar los niños me dicen que siempre no. También he tenido que 21 descansar de mi trabajo para hacer todo lo que me han pedido que haga.

1 19. Tengo la esperanza que María, M., y N. se reunirán pronto.
2 Declaro bajo pena de perjurio bajo las leyes del Estado de California y las leyes de los 3 Estados Unidos que lo anterior es verdadero y correcto.

Nombre del menor:	M [REDACTED] A [REDACTED] m [REDACTED] s [REDACTED]	Número del menor A:	[REDACTED]
Alias (si las tuviera):	Fecha de nacimiento del menor: [REDACTED] /10
Nombre del patrocinador:	Francisco de JESÚS SANTOQUÍ Fecha: 05/10/18

Le solicitó a la Oficina de Reubicación de Refugiados (Office of Refugee Resettlement, ORR) patrocinar a un niño extranjero no acompañado en el cuidado y la custodia del gobierno federal conforme al acuerdo extrajudicial estipulado Flores v. Reno, número 85-4544-RJK (Px) (C.D. Cal., 17 de enero de 1997), sección 462 del Homeland Security Act de 2002 y la sección 235 del William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act de 2008. Si se aprueba la solicitud de patrocinio, recibirá un formulario de Verificación de liberación de ORR y se celebrará un acuerdo de custodia con el gobierno federal en el cual acepta cumplir con las siguientes disposiciones mientras el menor esté en su cuidado:

- Proporcionar el bienestar mental y físico del menor, que incluye, entre otros, alimentos, refugio, vestimenta, educación, atención médica y otros servicios según sea necesario.
- Si no es el tutor legal ni el padre o la madre del menor, haga los mejores esfuerzos por establecer una custodia legal con el tribunal local dentro de un tiempo razonable.
- Asistir a un programa de orientación legal proporcionado por el Departamento de Justicia (Department of Justice, DOJ), o programa de orientación legal para custodios (patrocinadores) de la Oficina Ejecutiva para la Revisión de la Inmigración (Executive Office for Immigration Review, EOIR), si está disponible en el lugar donde reside.
- Según dónde esté pendiente el caso de inmigración del menor, notificar al Tribunal de Inmigración o al Tribunal de Apelaciones de Inmigración local en un período de cinco (5) días de todo cambio de dirección o número de teléfono del menor, usando el formulario de cambio de dirección de extranjeros (formulario EOIR-33). Además, si es necesario, presentar una petición de cambio de competencia territorial a nombre del menor. La petición de cambio de competencia territorial debe contener información especificada por el Tribunal de Inmigración. Tenga en cuenta que la petición de cambio de competencia territorial puede requerir la ayuda de un abogado. Para obtener asesoramiento sobre la "petición de cambio de competencia territorial", consulte el Manual de práctica del Tribunal de Inmigración en <http://1.usa.gov/e0H9zL>. Para obtener información sobre casos de inmigración, comuníquese con el sistema de información de casos de inmigración de EOIR llamando al 1-800-898-7180. Visite el sitio web de EOIR para obtener información adicional en: <http://www.justice.gov/coir/formslst.html>.
- Notificar al Departamento de Seguridad del Territorio Nacional (Department of Homeland Security, DHS) o a Servicios de Ciudadanía e Inmigración de los Estados Unidos (U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services) en un período de diez (10) días de todo cambio de dirección, presentando la Tarjeta de Cambio de Dirección de Extranjero (AR-11) o de manera electrónica en <http://1.usa.gov/Ac5MP>.
- Asegurar la presencia del menor en todos los procedimientos futuros ante DHS o Inmigración y Seguridad de Aduanas (Immigration and Customs Enforcement, ICE) y el Departamento de Justicia (Department of Justice, DOJ) o EOIR. Para obtener información sobre casos de inmigración, comuníquese con el sistema de información de casos de EOIR llamando al: 1-800-898-7180.
- Asegurar que el menor se presente ante ICE para la expulsión de los Estados Unidos si un juez de inmigración emite una orden de expulsión o una orden de salida voluntaria. Se asigna al menor un oficial de deportación para los procedimientos de expulsión.

Cómo completar esta solicitud

IMPORTANTE: Si no puede completar estos pasos en el lapso de siete (7) días, infórmeselo al Administrador de su caso.

Si todavía no lo ha hecho, debe firmar y devolver de inmediato al Administrador de su caso el formulario de Autorización de divulgación de información y una copia de su identificación (ID) con foto emitida por el gobierno.

Si se le pide que presente huellas dactilares, el Administrador de su caso lo ayudará a programar una cita para presentar sus huellas dactilares en el lapso de tres (3) días. Comuníquese con el Administrador de su caso si tiene preguntas.

Paso 2

Lea el Manual del patrocinador y el Acuerdo del patrocinador sobre el cuidado que incluye otra información importante que debe saber acerca de patrocinar a un menor en nuestro programa.

Paso 3

Complete y firme la Solicitud de reunificación familiar (páginas 3 a 7 de este paquete).

Paso 4

Reúna los documentos necesarios que se enumeran en la sección Documentos probatorios (páginas 8 a 10 de este paquete).

Paso 5

Presente la Solicitud de reunificación familiar (esta solicitud) y los documentos probatorios necesarios al Administrador de su caso.

Preguntas frecuentes

¿Puedo patrocinar a mi hijo si no tengo documentos?

Sí. La Oficina de Reubicación de Refugiados (ORR, Office of Refugee Resettlement)/División de Servicios de Niños No-Acompañados (Division of Unaccompanied Children's Services, DUCS) prefiere entregar un niño a su madre, padre o tutor legal sin importar la situación migratoria.

¿Tiene un costo patrocinar a un niño?

No. No se exigen cargos para completar los requisitos para patrocinar a un niño. Sin embargo, usted puede ser responsable de los costos de viaje y como acompañante del niño.

¿Necesito un abogado para patrocinar a un niño?

No. No necesita un abogado para completar los requisitos para patrocinar a un niño. Si necesita ayuda para completar los requisitos, el Administrador de su caso lo puede ayudar. Si busca atención adicional, tenga en cuenta que no hay ningún cargo por completar los requisitos para patrocinar a un niño.

¿Por qué tengo que presentar mis huellas dactilares?

ORR/DUCS requiere investigaciones de antecedentes para garantizar la seguridad del niño. Si se le pide que presente huellas dactilares, el Administrador de su caso lo ayudará a programar una cita para presentar sus huellas dactilares en el lapso de tres (3) días. Comuníquese con el Administrador de su caso si tiene preguntas.

¿Qué información debo proporcionar?

Debe completar la Solicitud de reunificación familiar y los documentos probatorios. También debe responder preguntas del Administrador de su caso sobre su hogar, la relación con el niño y su capacidad de cuidar el bienestar físico y mental del niño. Debe proporcionar prueba de su identidad.

¿Cuándo tengo que entregarle estos documentos al Administrador de mi caso?

Debe presentar toda la información necesaria en el lapso de siete (7) días o antes, si es posible. Cuanto antes presente todos los documentos necesarios, con más rapidez ORR tomará una decisión sobre la liberación del niño para su custodia. ORR le informará de inmediato la decisión sobre la liberación del niño para su custodia o le notificará si se necesita una evaluación o información adicional.

Sponsor Care Agreement

Office of Refugee Resettlement

Le solicitó a la Oficina de Reubicación de Refugiados (Office of Refugee Resettlement, ORR) patrocinar a un niño extranjero no acompañado en el cuidado y la custodia del gobierno federal conforme al acuerdo extrajudicial estipulado Flores v. Reno, número 85-4544-RJK (Px) (C.D. Cal., 17 de enero de 1997), sección 462 del Homeland Security Act de 2002 y la sección 235 del William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act de 2008. Si se aprueba la solicitud de patrocinio, recibirá un formulario de Verificación de liberación de ORR y se celebrará un acuerdo de custodia con el gobierno federal en el cual acepta cumplir con las siguientes disposiciones mientras el menor esté en su cuidado:

- Proporcionar el bienestar mental y físico del menor, que incluye, entre otros, alimentos, refugio, vestimenta, educación, atención médica y otros servicios según sea necesario.
- Si no es el tutor legal ni el padre o la madre del menor, haga los mejores esfuerzos por establecer una custodia legal con el tribunal local dentro de un tiempo razonable.
- Asistir a un programa de orientación legal proporcionado por el Departamento de Justicia (Department of Justice, DOJ), o programa de orientación legal para custodios (patrocinadores) de la Oficina Ejecutiva para la Revisión de la Inmigración (Executive Office for Immigration Review, EOIR), si está disponible en el lugar donde reside.
- Según dónde esté pendiente el caso de inmigración del menor, notificar al Tribunal de Inmigración o al Tribunal de Apelaciones de Inmigración local en un período de cinco (5) días de todo cambio de dirección o número de teléfono del menor, usando el formulario de cambio de dirección de extranjeros (formulario EOIR-33). Además, si es necesario, presentar una petición de cambio de competencia territorial a nombre del menor. La petición de cambio de competencia territorial debe contener información especificada por el Tribunal de Inmigración. Tenga en cuenta que la petición de cambio de competencia territorial puede requerir la ayuda de un abogado. Para obtener asesoramiento sobre la "petición de cambio de competencia territorial", consulte el Manual de práctica del Tribunal de Inmigración en http://www.justice.gov/eoir/vii/OCIIPracManual/ocij_page1.htm. Para obtener información sobre casos de inmigración, comuníquese con el sistema de información de casos de inmigración de EOIR llamando al 1-800-898-7180. Visite el sitio web de EOIR para obtener información adicional en: <http://www.justice.gov/eoir/formslist.htm>.
- Notificar al Departamento de Seguridad del Territorio Nacional (Department of Homeland Security, DHS) o a Servicios de Ciudadanía e Inmigración de los Estados Unidos (U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services) en un período de diez (10) días de todo cambio de dirección, presentando la Tarjeta de Cambio de Dirección de Extranjero (AR-11) o de manera electrónica en <http://i.usa.gov/AcSMP>.
- Asegurar la presencia del menor en todos los procedimientos futuros ante DHS o Inmigración y Seguridad de Aduanas (Immigration and Customs Enforcement, ICE) y el Departamento de Justicia (Department of Justice, DOJ) o EOIR. Para obtener información sobre casos de inmigración, comuníquese con el sistema de información de casos de EOIR llamando al: 1-800-898-7180.

- Asegurar que el menor se presente ante ICE para la expulsión de los Estados Unidos si un juez de inmigración emite una orden de expulsión o una orden de salida voluntaria. Se asigna al menor un oficial de deportación para los procedimientos de expulsión.
- Notificar a la autoridad policial local o a los Servicios de Protección Infantil local o estatal si el menor estuvo o está en riesgo de estar sujeto a abuso, abandono, descuido o maltrato o si se entera de que el menor ha sido amenazado, abusado o agredido sexual o físicamente, o ha desaparecido. Se debe notificar ni bien sea posible o antes de las 24 horas después de ocurrido el acontecimiento, o después de tener conocimiento del riesgo o la amenaza.
- Notificar al Centro Nacional para Niños Perdidos y Explotados (National Center for Missing and Exploited Children) al 1-800-843-5678 si el menor desaparece, fue secuestrado o se escapa. Se debe notificar ni bien sea posible o antes de las 24 horas después de enterarse de la desaparición del menor.
- Notificar a ICE si algún individuo que se crea que represente un sindicato de contrabando de extranjeros, crimen organizado o una organización de tráfico de seres humanos se comunica de alguna forma con el menor. Notificar lo antes posible o antes de las 24 horas después de conocer esta información. Puede llamar a ICE al 1-866-347-2423.

términos de este Acuerdo de cuidado del patrocinador.

- Si no es el tutor legal ni el padre o madre del niño, en caso de que ya no pueda y no esté dispuesto a cuidar al menor y no pueda transferir de manera temporal la custodia física y el menor reúna los requisitos de la definición de niño extranjero no acompañado, debe notificar a ORR al 1-800-203-7001.
- La liberación del menor mencionado anteriormente de la Oficina de Reubicación de Refugiados para su cuidado no le otorga al menor ningún estado de inmigración legal y el menor debe presentarse a los procedimientos del tribunal de Inmigración.

Declaración del patrocinador

Oficina de Reubicación de Refugiados

Declaro y afirmo, bajo pena de perjurio, que soy el patrocinador propuesto para el menor y que mi Solicitud de reunificación familiar y los documentos usados como respaldo a la solicitud funcionan como evidencia de que tengo la plena intención de proporcionarle cuidado al menor que pretendo patrocinar. Asimismo, no me presento como patrocinador para no tener a un menor a mi cuidado y luego transferir ese menor a otra persona, en incumplimiento de la política de la Oficina de Reubicación de Refugiados (Office of Refugee Resettlement, ORR) y las leyes federales.

Solo puedo transferir a un menor al cuidado de otra persona en las siguientes situaciones:

- (1) a los padres biológicos del menor, en caso de que al hacerlo no exponga al niño a un peligro inmediato y que no haya una finalización de los derechos parentales;
- (2) en el caso de que no pueda o no desee continuar el patrocinio debido a una dificultad inesperada o en el caso de que deje inminente los Estados Unidos, transferiré el cuidado del menor a un cuidador alternativo (y únicamente al cuidador alternativo) identificado en mi respuesta a las Preguntas 12a-e de mi Solicitud de reunificación familiar, conforme a lo aprobado por la ORR en mi Plan de cuidado del patrocinador, si al hacerlo no expongo al menor a un peligro inmediato;
- (3) a funcionarios encargados del cumplimiento de las leyes locales, estatales o federales o funcionarios del Servicio de Protección de Menores (Child Protective Service, CPS), o a las personas designadas del gobierno local o estatal.

Antes de intentar transferir a un menor, debo notificar al Centro de Atención Telefónica Nacional (National Call Center, NCC) de la ORR al 1-800-203-7001. La Oficina de Reubicación de Refugiados puede requerir más información antes de que pueda realizar una transferencia de cuidado o puede requerir una medida correctiva antes de aprobar una transferencia.

Si no notifico a la Oficina de Reubicación de Refugiados sobre una transferencia o si transfiero al menor a una persona no autorizada, entiendo que el gobierno federal puede procesarme por perjuicio, fraude, trata de personas u otros delitos penales establecidos en la ley federal, según corresponda.

Comprendo que la conspiración o la cooperación en la comisión de cualquiera de los siguientes actos constituye un delito:

- (1) ingresar o intentar ingresar a un extranjero a los Estados Unidos por un lugar que no sea el puerto de entrada designado u otro lugar designado por el Departamento de Seguridad Nacional (Department of Homeland Security, DHS);
- (2) transportar o mover, o intentar transportar y mover, a un extranjero que no tiene una condición legal dentro de los Estados Unidos para apoyar una violación de la ley;
- (3) alojar u ocultar, o intentar alojar y ocultar, a un extranjero que no tiene una condición legal dentro de los Estados Unidos; o

(4) incentivar o inducir a un extranjero para que venga a los Estados Unidos si su residencia es o será una violación a la ley.

Además, puedo estar sujeto a tener que asumir una responsabilidad civil derivada de una transferencia del cuidado de un menor a una persona no autorizada de forma negligente o imprudente. La Oficina de Reubicación de Refugiados coopera plenamente con las autoridades encargadas del cumplimiento de las leyes locales, estatales y federales, incluidas las autoridades de inmigración federales o las autoridades de bienestar de menores, para poner en práctica fielmente las leyes que involucran la divulgación de mi información personal en el caso de que un menor sea transferido de una manera no autorizada.

Además, entiendo que, si no soy un ciudadano estadounidense, una transferencia no autorizada de un menor puede afectar mi capacidad de permanecer en los Estados Unidos, independientemente de mi condición legal de inmigración.

Afirmo o certifico que entiendo la advertencia proporcionada en esta declaración.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
Child and Family Services Agency

Request for a Child Protection Register (CPR) Check

The purpose of the Child Protection Register is to protect children and to ensure their safety by maintaining an index of perpetrators of child abuse and neglect in the District of Columbia. This confidential index includes the names of individuals with substantiated and/or inconclusive findings from the investigative reports of the Child Protective Services Unit of the Child and Family Services Agency. Authorized individuals may request background checks to establish whether an individual has a record of substantiated abuse or neglect of a child that occurred in the District of Columbia.

- ▶ To request a local police clearance for the District of Columbia, please visit <https://mpdc.dc.gov/node/187552>.
- ▶ For information about the Sex Offender Registry, visit: <https://mpdc.dc.gov/service/sex-offender-registry>.
- ▶ If you are making a request on behalf of a state child welfare agency outside of the District of Columbia and need the history of a family previously living in the District of Columbia, you may call 202-671-SAFE.
- ▶ For other questions, call the CPR Unit at 202-727-8885 between 8:30 am and 4:30 pm Monday through Friday.

Read all instructions – incomplete, incorrect or illegible forms will be returned and your request may be delayed

- Do not complete an old version of the form; get the latest form at <https://cfsa.dc.gov/service/background-checks>.
- Mail or deliver original application (no photocopies); no faxed, emailed, or scanned applications accepted.

Part I

- Schools (other than DCPS), child care facilities, private foster care agencies, and other private, community-based organizations should select “Non-Government Organization” as the Requestor Type.
- CPR check results are not transferrable and cannot be shared from one agency or employer to another.

Part II

- If you have no middle name write “no middle name” or if a middle name is an initial, indicate “initial only.”
- If the answer to any question is none, write “N/A”.

Part III

- An individual must sign the form to provide consent for CFSA to release information to an authorized requestor.
- The form must be signed in blue ink; electronic signatures are not permitted.
- An employment request allows access to substantiated reports of child maltreatment, to chief executive officers or directors of day care centers, schools, or any public or private organization working directly with children, for the purpose of making employment decisions.

Part IV

- Forms shall be returned if not notarized (Note: applications for prospective and current CFSA resource parents and kin caregivers need not be notarized, but photo ID must be provided and the form must be signed in the presence of a CFSA employee).

Part V

- Self-check applications must be submitted in person, not by mail.
- Individuals requesting a self-check and CFSA resource parents and kin caregivers must present one non-expired, government-issued, photo identification: e.g., driver’s license, state identification card, passport, “green card”.
- Results of CPR self-checks may not be used for employment purposes. Employers must directly request CPR clearances for prospective or current employees.

MAIL or HAND DELIVER completed forms to:	Attn: Child Protection Register Unit Child and Family Services Agency 200 I Street SE, 3rd Floor Washington, DC 20003	Applications accepted between 8:30 am and 4:30 pm Monday through Friday
---	--	--

Please type or print clearly. Sign the form in blue ink, and date where indicated. Thoroughly review and submit to the CFSA CPR office. Allow up to 30 business days for results to be processed. Expedited requests will be considered on a case-by-case basis. Forms will be returned if incomplete, incorrect, or illegible resulting in a delayed response.

17 RICHARD AUSTRIA

18 I, Richard Austria, declare as follows:

19 1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated
20 herein.

21 2. I am an investigator for the Oregon Department of Justice.

22 3. I have made several calls to request access to the Sheridan Federal Prison for 23 the purpose of interviewing immigration detainees who had been separated from their children.
24 I have not received a single return call from any of the messages I left.

25 4. On June 15, 2018, at 2:54pm, I called the Sheridan Federal Prison identifying 26 myself as working for the Oregon Attorney General's office and seeking access to the detainees. I specifically left message to have Shawn Price or any person able to allow access to call me back. To date, I have not received a return call.

5. On June 19, 2018, at 10:27 am, I called the Sheridan Federal Prison and left a message identifying myself as working for the Oregon Attorney General's office and seeking access to the detainees and requesting a return call. To date, I have not received a return call.

6. On June 19, 2018, at 1:38 pm, I called ICE requesting to speak with Mr. Louie and identifying myself as working for the Oregon Attorney General's office and seeking access to the detainees at Sheridan Federal Prison and requesting a return call. Mr. Louie's name was provided as a point of contact for ICE. I later learned his first name is Michael. To date, I have not received a return call.

7. On June 19, 2018, at 1:48pm, I sent an email to ICE Agent Chad Allen requesting access to Sheridan Federal Prison and indicating I was a representative for the Oregon Attorney General. To date, I have not received a return email from Agent Allen.

8. On June 20, 2018, at 10:20 am and again at 11:50 am, I again called ICE and both calls went to voicemail. To date, I have not received a return call.

9. On June 22, 2018, at 1:15 pm, I called and left a message with ICE. To date, I have not received a return call.

10. Again on June 28, 2018, I called and left a message for ICE and did not receive a return call.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington and the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

DATED this 29th day of June, 2018 at Salem, Oregon.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

STATE OF WASHINGTON, et al.,

NO. 18-cv-00939

Plaintiff,

DECLARATION OF LAURA VELEZ

V.

DONALD TRUMP in his official capacity
as President of the United States, et al.,

Defendants.

I, Laura Velez, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.
 2. I am the Deputy Commissioner in charge of the Bureau of Child Welfare and Community Services (CWCS) of the New York State Office of Children and Family Services (OCFS).

A. QCFS's Interest in Promoting Family Unity

3. The mission of OCFS is to promote the safety, permanency, and well-being of children, families, and communities in New York State. OCFS is dedicated to overseeing integrated services for New York's children, youth, families, and other vulnerable populations. OCFS is also dedicated to promoting the growth and development of these groups as well as protecting these groups from trauma, violence, neglect, abuse, and abandonment.

1 4. OCFS is dedicated to keeping families together whenever possible. Our policies
 2 are driven by the well-accepted notion that family unity is the most desired outcome for 3 children. Indeed, it is the long-established policy and practice of OCFS to prioritize 4 keeping a child with his or her parents. Thus, our first obligation is to provide families
 5 with “preventive services” aimed at preventing families from breaking apart. When 6 separation is unfortunately necessary, it is the primary goal of the agency to quickly and 7 safely reunite children with their parents. See N.Y. Serv. Law § 384-b(1); N.Y. Exec.
 8 Law § 990.

9 5. The prioritization of family unity is set forth in the legislative findings
 10 accompanying Section 384-b(1)(a) of the Social Services Law, which concerns
 11 guardianship and custody of destitute or dependent children. For example, the legislature 12 found that:

13 a. “It is desirable for children to grow up with a normal family in a 14 permanent home and that such circumstances offer the best opportunity for children to 15 develop and thrive,” id. § 384-b(1)(a)(i);

16 b. “It is generally desirable for the child to remain with or be returned to the 17 birth parent because the child’s need for a normal family life will usually best be met in 18 the home of the birth parent, and that parents are entitled to bring up their own children 19 unless the best interests of the child would thereby be endangered,” id. § 384-b(1)(a)(ii);

20 c. “The state’s first obligation is to help the family with services to prevent 21 its break-up or to reunite it if the child has already left home,” id. § 384-b(1)(a)(iii);

22 d. “When it is clear that the birth parent cannot or will not provide a normal 23 family home for the child and when continued foster care is not an appropriate plan for 24 the child, then a permanent alternative home should be sought for the child,” id. § 384- 25 b(1)(a)(iv).

1 6. OCFS also operates under a principle of non-discrimination. To that end, OCFS
2 promulgates regulatory standards that expressly prohibit discrimination or harassment of 3 adults or children involved in child welfare programs and services based on race, creed,
4 color, national origin, age, sex, religion, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression,
5 marital status or disability. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. Tit. 18 §§ 421.3, 423.4, 6 441.24.

7 B. OCFS's Licensing and Oversight Responsibilities

8 7. OCFS regulates and supervises the child welfare activities of each local 9 department of social services (LDSS) in each New York State county. N.Y. Soc. Serv.
10 Law §§ 20, 34. In addition, OCFS regulates, licenses, inspects, and supervises residential 11 programs that care for foster children in New York State. Id. §§ 460-b, 460-c, 462-a.
12 OCFS certifies facilities that provide residential care for foster children and also sets 13 standards for certification and approval of foster family boarding homes through 14 regulation. Id. §§ 20, 34. 378 and 460-b.

15 8. OCFS issues operating certificates to voluntary authorized agencies in New York
16 State that care for children placed in the Unaccompanied Alien Children (UAC) program 17 (UACs), which now includes children who have been separated from their parents at the 18 Southwestern border. A voluntary authorized agency, as defined in N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law 19 § 371(10)(a), is a not-for-profit corporation organized under the laws of the State of New 20 York and approved by OCFS to "care for" (i.e., operate residential programs), "place 21 out" (i.e., operate an adoption program) or "board out" (i.e., operate a foster family
22 boarding home program). Depending on the operating authority of the voluntary agency
23 and the contract with the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR), some voluntary 24 agencies provide residential care to UACs, some place them in federal foster family
25 homes, and some do both. The voluntary agency may also work with ORR to find 26

1 appropriate sponsors (i.e., family members) and facilitate the children moving to reside
2 with the sponsors who are then responsible to care for the children.

3 9. Although these voluntary agencies contract with ORR, which pays these 4 voluntary agencies to provide care to children in the UAC program, OCFS remains the 5 licensing agency for children's residential programs in New York State. As such, OCFS
6 retains authority over the voluntary agencies, including the programs that serve UAC
7 children. Specifically, OCFS retains the authority to conduct building, equipment, fire, 8 and safety inspections of these facilities. OCFS also has the authority to establish 9 regulatory standards for the certification or approval of all foster homes in New York
10 State. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law §§ 20, 34, 378, 460-a; N.Y. Not-for-Profit Corp. Law §
11 404(b).

12 10. ORR currently contracts with eleven voluntary agencies in New York State to 13 provide care to the children ORR moves into the UAC program in New York State:
14 Abbott House; Catholic Family Center; Catholic Guardian Services; Cayuga Home for 15 Children; Children's Home of Kingston; Children's Village; Jewish Child Care
16 Association of New York; Rising Ground (formerly Leake and Watts Services); Lincoln
17 Hall; Lutheran Social Services of New York; and MercyFirst.

18 C. Children Separated From Their Families at the Southwestern Border.

19 11. In response to New York State's request for information, HHS represented that 20 on June 18, 2018, there were at least 1,292 children in the UAC program in the care of 21 nine agencies in New York State. However, HHS did not inform New York State what 22 subset of these 1,292 children had been separated from their families at the Southwestern 23 border. Additionally, the 1,292 number was an undercount because HHS failed to 24 account for children in the care of two providers licensed by New York State to serve 25 children in the UAC program.

1 12. Moreover, the 1,292 number does not provide the full picture of the children who
2 have been sent to New York State by HHS as part of the UAC program. First, that number 3 is a point-of-time snapshot; it does not tell us the total number of children who were 4 separated from their parents and placed in the UAC program in New York State over 5 time since the “zero tolerance” policy was put into effect in April 2018. Second, it does
6 not reflect the number of children who were placed with New York State sponsor
7 families. Because of these and other limitations regarding the information provided by 8 HHS, New York State decided to conduct further investigation.

9 13. Specifically, based on OCFS’s investigation, the agency estimated that on June 10 22, 2018, 321 of the children in the UAC program in New York State had separated from 11 their parents at the Southwestern border. Again, OCFS’s investigation was limited to 12 children in the UAC program on that date. This point-in-time snapshot does not include
13 any separated children who had been transferred out of the UAC program to sponsor 14 homes in (or outside of) New York State, or children who entered the UAC program after 15 June 22, 2018. Nor does it reflect the total number of separated children who have been 16 sent to New York State since the inception of the separation policy.

17 14. OCFS staff have visited all eleven agencies to review records, confirm that 18 medical and mental-health assessments are being performed, and to confirm that the 19 agencies are otherwise in compliance. In the course of OCFS’ visits, we determined that 20 the majority of children who had been separated from their parents were between the 21 ages of five and thirteen. Although the children appear to be physically well and properly 22 cared for by the agencies, some children were able to clearly express their sadness and 23 how very much they missed their mothers, fathers, siblings and other family members.

1 D. State Protections for Parents and Children

2 14. New York State goes to great lengths to provide significant due process 3 protections for both parents and children when families are separated because of 4 government action. When a child is placed in foster care in New York, state statutes and 5 regulations afford both the parent and the child a range of rights, including the right of 6 visitation. Indeed, the child's family service plan must include a plan for regular 7 visitation between the parents and child. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 409-e; N.Y. Comp.
8 Codes R. & Regs. Tit. 18 § 428.6. See also N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1030(a) (providing that 9 a parent has a right of regular and reasonable visitation with a child in foster care unless 10 otherwise prohibited by court order).

11 15. Parents have a right to regular visitation even when they are incarcerated in prison 12 or jail. In that situation, the child welfare agency must make suitable arrangements with 13 the correctional facility for a parent to visit with the child, unless the visit would be 14 harmful to the child or visitation is prohibited by court order. 11 OCFS-ADM-07; see 15 also N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1030(a). Moreover, parents who are incarcerated are entitled to 16 participate in the planning for their child in foster care by participating in family court
17 proceedings and periodic family service plan reviews. See N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs.
18 Tit. 18 § 428.9. To protect these vital rights, state law provides that the parent of a child
19 in foster care has a right to counsel assigned by the court where such parent is financially 20 unable to obtain one. N.Y. Family Court Act § 262. Such rules are premised on the 21 importance of the parent-child bond, and a recognition of the parent's critical, 22 indispensable role in assuring that the needs of his or her child are met.

23 16. The parents and children whom Defendants have separated at the border have not 24 been afforded these visitation procedures, nor has there been any process to recognize or 25 protect their rights. Defendants' disregard for the rights of these children and families is 26

1 deeply harmful to these children, undermines OCFS's ability to provide for their health,
2 safety and well-being, and results in these children being treated differently than other 3 children that are similarly in the state's care.

4 E. Post-Placement Services

5 17. Once a child in the UAC program is placed with a sponsor in New York State, 6 the child is no longer considered to be in federal custody. At that point, the child is 7 entitled to a variety of services funded by the state, including educational services, early 8 intervention services, and access to healthcare, among others. New York State makes 9 these services available to such children, often at the states' expense, in support of the 10 state's interest in providing for the health, safety, and well-being of all residents.

11 18. A child's placements with a sponsor may be disrupted for a variety of reasons. If 12 the child becomes at risk of entering foster care—for example, because of allegations of 13 abuse or neglect by the person now legally responsible for the child—the child welfare 14 system will provide preventive services to attempt to keep the child safely in the new 15 home; such services are funded, in part, by New York State. If those services are 16 unsuccessful and the child must be removed from the sponsor's home, New York State
17 will also partly fund the child's placement in a new foster home and needed services 18 while in the foster care system.

19 19. New York State announced that it would make additional services available for 20 unaccompanied minor children, including children who had been separated from their 21 parents at the border. Among other assistance, the State will (a) dispatch personnel, 22 resources, and services to foster care providers that are caring for these children; (b) 23 provide funding for targeted, community-based services, including, but not limited to 24 mental health and trauma-informed care, accessing and navigating the healthcare and 25 public education systems, and other integration-related services for immigrant children discharged from foster care facilities to sponsor family members; (c) take actions to support family reunification, including working with consulates at foster care facilities to provide immediate support for identifying family units; (d) provide group and individual counseling to children, sponsors, and reunited families; and (e) provide information and referral services to assist families with their needs. The State will also expand services under the Liberty Defense Project to provide the children with access to legal representation. The services will be provided in collaboration with the New York State Office of New Americans Opportunity Centers.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of Washington and the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

16 DECLARATION MARGARITA
17 JOSE FRANCISCO

18 I, Margarita Jose Francisco, declare as follows:

19 1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated
20 herein.

21 2. I am permanent resident of the United States and live in the state of Oregon.

22 3. My eight year-old great-nephew, Agosto Manuel Manuel Perez, has been 23 detained by the United States government in Mesa, Arizona and has been separated from his 24 father, Andres Manuel Jose, who is being held in New Mexico at the Otero County Processing Center. They came together from Guatemala to the United States and were separated at the border approximately one month ago. They want to obtain asylum in this county. Their mother, Magdalena Perez Silvestre, stayed in Guatemala.

1 4. Andres has not seen or been able to speak to his son, although I have deposited
 2 money in Andres' account at the Otero County facility so that he can make phone calls. I have 3 been able to talk to Andres. I learned from him that Andres was recently told by immigration
 4 officials that if he voluntarily left and returned to Guatemala, he would be immediately
 5 released. Andres declined the offer since he was told he would not be reunited with his son
 6 prior to being released. Andres decided to stay to continue with the asylum process because he 7 was not going to leave his son.

8 5. Agosto's mother, Magdalena, has been able to speak with her son on the phone.
 9 When she last spoke to Agosto, approximately ten days ago, Agosto said that he was feeling ill.
 10 She has not been able to speak with him since. Magdelana is very worried about Agosto, as 11 am I.

12 6. Magdalena has been contacted by someone in the United States, regarding her 13 son. I believe they were from Southwest Key Casa Kokopelli. Magdalena cannot read or write 14 and therefore cannot use this information or communicate it to me.

15 7. Magdalena did send me legal papers from Guatemala making me Agosto's 16 guardian. I have contacted ORR five times over the last two weeks to explain that I am his 17 guardian and to ask that he be released to me so he can stay with me in Oregon. My friend, 18 Emily Fanjoy at the Tillamook Women's Center, helped on these calls with English and 19 Spanish. No one at ORR would give us information about Agosto. They instructed me to wait 20 for Agosto's case manager from the child detention facility to call me. ORR explained that the 21 center was responsible for sending us the resettlement paperwork. ORR also explained that 22 they were only permitted to send one contact to the facility every 3 days, and therefore we 23 should only call every three days. One person said I needed to talk to Agosto's case worker, 24 but stated that had no way to know who that was, and that they would contact us directly. If 25 that information was sent to Magdelena, she has been unable to get it to me. I am very 1 frustrated by this process and extremely worried about Agosto and his health and well being. I

2 just want my great nephew to be with his family where any eight year old child belongs.

3 8. I do not read English or Spanish or my first language, Q'anjob'al, which is a
4 Mayan language. Therefore, Emily Fanjoy has read this declaration to me. I understand
5 everything in this declaration and understand the importance of telling the truth. Everything I 6 say here is true.

13 EMARY C. ARONSON

14 v.

15 DONALD TRUMP in his official capacity
16 as President of the United States, et al.,

17 Defendants.

18 I, Emary C. Aronson, declare as follows:

19 1. I am over the age of eighteen and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated 20 herein.

21 2. I am Chief Program Officer for Robin Hood. I oversee Robin Hood's grant-
22 making efforts to support nonprofit and social services in New York City. I have been employed 23 by Robin Hood since 1999.

24 3. Robin Hood is one of New York City's largest poverty-fighting organizations.
25 Since its founding in 1988, Robin Hood has raised more than $2.5 billion in dollars, goods and 26 services to provide for hundreds of the most effective early childhood development programs, schools, legal services nonprofits, healthcare clinics, homeless shelters and other vital services in our city. Robin Hood's mission is to ensure that New York's neediest children and families have the tools they need to build better lives. Our work is based on a rigorous set of metrics that

1 measures the relationship between the cost of an intervention and the economic and social 2 benefits it produces for the individual being served.

3 4. Consistent with our mission is the belief that all children present in New York
 4 City, regardless of nativity or immigration status, have the right to safety, to grow up in a 5 nurturing environment with their parent or guardian, to be educated, to enjoy their childhood,
 6 and to receive due process in immigration proceedings.

7 5. Robin Hood invests more than $30 million annually to support programs that 8 promote early childhood development, including initiatives focused on the crucial first 1,000
 9 days of life. More than 50 years of research demonstrates that the lack of nurturing care from a 10 parent or committed caregiver, social interaction, appropriate stimulation, and psychological 11 comfort lead to a number of deleterious impacts that have lifelong consequences for children^{1,2}.
 12 These include serious impairments to healthy development leading to cognitive delays and 13 emotional dysregulation. Moreover, adverse childhood experiences, including even the brief 14 separation of children from their parents, are directly correlated with increased risk of 15 depression, suicidality, long-term physical health problems, substance abuse disorders, and other 16 social ills³.

17 6. Robin Hood also invests more than $5 million annually in programs that provide 18 immigration legal services. In 2013, we launched Immigrant Justice Corps, the country's first 19 legal fellowship program focused on immigration services. That program has now served more 20 than 40,000 immigrants in four states. In 2014, we also helped establish the ICARE Coalition,

1 which has provided legal counsel to nearly 1,500 Central American unaccompanied minors in 2 New York City. We make these investments because attaining legal status provides a long-term
 3 pathway out of poverty for immigrants in our city. Data from the Transactional Records Access
 4 Clearinghouse at Syracuse University demonstrate that legal representation in immigration
 5 proceedings increases the probability of a grant of legal status by at least 400 percent. However,
 6 the federal government does not appoint counsel in immigration proceedings, thereby 7 endangering immigrant children's right to due process, diminishing the likelihood they will 8 attain legal status and permanent work authorization, and constraining their ability to contribute 9 to our society and our economy into adulthood.

10 7. Robin Hood funds more than 200 nonprofit organizations every year. Through 11 our work, we have an intimate knowledge of the impact that shifts in federal policy can have on 12 local nonprofit operations. Without clear planning, communications, and transparent data 13 sharing in the implementation of new policies at the federal level, local social services are 14 severely disrupted. Nonprofit executives, attorneys, social workers and clinicians can be pulled 15 away from serving their regular clients to coordinate and respond to emergency needs.

16 8. We have learned that at least 300 children who were forcibly separated from their 17 parents are currently in New York City as a result of the "zero-tolerance policy." We have been 18 in contact with more than two dozen agencies involved in mounting a local emergency response
 19 to the situation. This outreach has included federal officials, state and local government 20 agencies, foster care agencies caring for these children, nonprofit legal services providers, 21 experts on the health and mental health of young children, and national and local philanthropic 22 organizations.

23 9. We know that organizations in New York City involved in this effort are 24 operating at the highest levels of professionalism and care for these vulnerable children.
 25 However, the current situation resulting from the "zero-tolerance policy" has demanded a far 26 greater volume and type of service than historically they have been funded to provide. We have

1 learned that these children, in being separated from their parents, have experienced severe 2 trauma, compounded as they have faced difficulty in contacting or being reunited with their
3 parents or caregivers. Nonprofit legal services providers do not have sufficient staffing or space
4 to provide counsel to all those in need and are having to quickly gain new expertise to be able to 5 serve children who are pre-verbal. Translation services are also lacking, particularly for those 6 who children speak indigenous Central American languages. Immigrant children are now 7 spending twice as long in foster care as they have historically, as potential sponsor families are 8 reluctant to come forward due to increased immigration enforcement activities nationwide. As 9 a result, local governments and philanthropic institutions will likely need to divert millions of 10 dollars to ensure an effective and humane response to the situation on the ground.

11 10. We firmly believe that preserving the rights of asylum seekers, including young 12 children, as already enshrined in our laws, is vital to the fair administration of justice, to the 13 alleviation of poverty, and to our country's economic prosperity.

14 11. The "zero-tolerance policy" instituted at our border, which directly led to the 15 separation of children and parents, has caused irreparable social and emotional trauma to the 16 hundreds of children now in our city as well as to their families detained across the country. This 17 is not a political issue. This policy has denied them and their families their fundamental right to 18 due process, overburdened local nonprofit services providers, and increased the likelihood that 19 these vulnerable children will live their lives in poverty.

16 DECLARATION OF TOM K. WONG
17 IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS'
18 MOTION FOR EXPEDITED
19 DISCOVERY

20 I, Tom K. Wong, declare as follows:

21 1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.

22 If called as a witness, I could and would testify competently to the matters set forth below.

23 2. I am an Associate Professor with tenure at the University of California, San 24 Diego (UCSD). I work in the political science department, which is consistently ranked by U.S.
25 News & World Report as one of the top ten political science departments nationally. I am also the Director of the International Migration Studies Program Minor at UCSD.

26 3. I am an expert on immigration. I have written two peer-reviewed books and several peer-reviewed journal articles, book chapters, and reports on this subject. My most recent book analyzes 31,193 roll call votes on immigration-related legislation in Congress from 2005 to present, which makes it the most comprehensive analysis to date on contemporary immigration policies in the United States.

1 4. I received a Ph.D. in political science at the end of the 2010-2011 academic year.
 2 I was a post-doctoral research fellow during the 2011-2012 academic year. I joined the political 3 science department at UCSD during the 2012-2013 academic year. I served as an advisor to the 4 White House Initiative on Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders (WHIAAPI), where I worked
 5 on the immigration portfolio, during the 2015-2016 academic year. I was promoted to the rank
 6 of Associate Professor with tenure at UCSD during the 2016-2017 academic year.

7 5. I have attached a true and complete copy of my curriculum vitae as Exhibit A to 8 this Declaration.

9 6. Data on the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units 10 at the Southwest border show that recent policies intended to deter families from attempting to 11 enter the U.S. without authorization have not had their desired deterrent effects. The data show 12 that the expanded use of family detention is not statistically significantly related to decreases in 13 the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border.
 14 The data also show that the use of family separation is not statistically significantly related to 15 decreases in the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the 16 Southwest border; instead, U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest 17 border have increased following the current administration's "zero tolerance" pilot. Moreover, 18 the data show that U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border have 19 followed seasonal trends, wherein the monthly number of apprehensions increases beginning 20 late Winter (February and March) and continues to increase through Spring (April, May, and 21 June) before declining at the start Summer (July).

22 7. In my first set of analyses, I evaluate changes over time in the monthly number
 23 of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border from October 2012
 24 to May 2018.¹ To the best of my knowledge, these data represent the range of publicly available

25 26 ¹ Data for Fiscal Year 2012 are available at (last accessed June 28, 2018):
<https://www.cbp.gov/newsroom/stats/southwest-border-unaccompanied-children/fy-2016>. Data for Fiscal Year

1 data from U.S. Customs and Border Protection on the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol
 2 apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border.

3 8. The method used to analyze these data is interrupted times series analysis
 4 (ITSA).² ITSA is a quasi-experimental research design, meaning a research design that evaluates
 5 causal effects using observational data, that is, data that do not come from experimental research
 6 that makes use of random assignment to control and treatment conditions. ITSA is used to 7 evaluate trends before, immediately following, and during the period after an intervention, such 8 as a policy change. ITSA estimates three main parameters: β_1 is the slope or trajectory of the 9 outcome variable before the start of the policy change; β_2 is the change in the level of the outcome
 10 variable in the period immediately following the start of the policy change; and β_3 is the effect of 11 the policy change over time.

12 9. In response to the increase in the number of arrivals of Central American families
 13 and unaccompanied children at the Southwest border in 2014, the Karnes County Residential 14 Center was converted from a civil detention facility to a family detention facility in July 2014.³
 15 During this time, families were also detained at a temporary facility in Artesia, New Mexico
 16 before the South Texas Family Residential Center in Dilley, Texas opened in December 2014.
 17 The conversion of the Karnes County Residential Center and the opening of the South Texas
 18 Family Residential Center represented major shifts, as the use of family detention had been 19 largely abandoned by the Obama administration prior to 2014.⁴ When delivering remarks at the

 The Karnes County Residential Center is managed by GEO Group, Inc. under an intergovernmental service agreement with Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE).

26 ⁴ For example, see (last accessed June 28, 2018): https://www.aclu.org/files/field_document/ACLU%20-%20Family%20Detention.pdf.

1 opening of the South Texas Family Residential Center, then Secretary Jeh Johnson stated, "I
 2 believe this is an effective deterrent."⁵

3 10. Using ITSA, I analyze the potential deterrent effect of the expanded use of family
 4 detention on the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the 5 Southwest border.

6 11. The results are reported in Table 1 below.⁶ Model 1 estimates the relationship
 7 between the expanded use of family detention, measured by the conversion of the Karnes County
 8 Residential Center in July 2014 (β_2) and each subsequent month thereafter (β_3), and the monthly 9 number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border. If the 10 expanded use of family detention has a deterrent effect, we would expect β_2 and β_3 to be negative
 11 and statistically significant, meaning the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions 12 of family units at the Southwest border decreases with the expanded use of family detention.

13 12. In Model 1, the β_1 coefficient is positive and statistically significant, which 14 affirms that the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the 15 Southwest border was increasing before July 2014. However, both the β_2 and β_3 coefficients are 16 statistically insignificant, which suggests that the expanded use of family detention is not 17 statistically significantly related to an immediate decrease or longer-term decreases in the 18 monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border.
 19 Otherwise put, the data do not provide evidence to suggest that family detention has a deterrent 20 effect, as the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the 21 Southwest border was increasing before July 2014, and apprehensions did not decrease in a 22 statistically significant way after July 2014.

13. Moreover, eight additional models were run specifying eight different pseudo-interventions, meaning different start dates for the expanded use of family detention. These pseudo-interventions address the possibility that policy changes need time to take effect. The pseudo-interventions analyzed include the months shortly after the conversion of the Karnes County Residential Center, the month of the opening of the South Texas Family Residential Center, and the three months after the opening of the South Texas Family Residential Center.⁷ These models produce qualitatively similar results, wherein the expanded use of family detention is not statistically significantly related to decreases in the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border.

14. Recent events provide a second intervention to test. Beginning in July 2017, as reported by the *New York Times*⁸ and by Vox,⁹ the Trump administration piloted a zero tolerance policy, wherein all persons caught attempting to enter the U.S. without authorization are referred to the Department of Justice for prosecution, including parents who are apprehended with their

⁷ These models specify the intervention as August 2014, or September 2014, or October 2014, or November 2014, or December 2014, or January 2015, or February 2015, or March 2015.

1 children. As it relates to family units, in prosecuting all persons caught attempting to enter the 2 U.S. without authorization, children have been separated from their parents. Whereas the Obama
 3 administration used family detention in response to Central American families and 4 unaccompanied children arriving at the Southwest border, the Trump administration has used
 5 family separation. In March 2017, in response to the question of whether the Trump 6 administration was going to separate children from their parents, current White House Chief of 7 Staff and then Department of Homeland Security Secretary John F. Kelly stated, “Yes, I am 8 considering, in order to deter more movement along this terribly dangerous network [migrating
 9 from Central America through Mexico to the U.S.], I am considering exactly that.”¹⁰ As recently 10 as June 2018, Attorney General Jeff Sessions reiterated the administration’s belief in the 11 deterrent effect of family separation stating, “We cannot and will not encourage people to bring 12 their children or other children to the country unlawfully by giving them immunity in the 13 process.”¹¹

14 15. Using ITSA, I analyze the deterrent effect of family separation on the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border.

15 16. The results are reported in Table 2 below.¹² Model 2 estimates the relationship between the use of family separation, measured by the beginning of the zero tolerance pilot in July 2017 (β_4) and each subsequent month thereafter (β_5), and the monthly number of U.S.
 expanded use of family detention in July 2014.

24 ¹² An autoregressive model AR(1) is specified and Newey-West standard errors are used to address 25 autocorrelation.

1 17. In Model 2, the β_1 coefficient remains positive and statistically significant, again
 2 affirming that the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the 3 Southwest border was increasing before July 2014. Both the β_2 and β_3 coefficients remain
 4 statistically insignificant, also affirming the results in Model 1. The β_4 coefficient is statistically 5 insignificant, which suggests that family separation is not statistically significantly related to an
 6 immediate decrease in the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units
 7 at the Southwest border. Unexpectedly, the β_5 coefficient is positive and highly statistically
 8 significant, which means that instead of a deterrent effect, the monthly number of U.S. Border
 9 Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border has increased significantly after 10 July 2017. Otherwise put, the data do not provide evidence to suggest that family separation has 11 a deterrent effect, as the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at 12 the Southwest border has increased after July 2017, not decreased.

23 Note: seven additional models were run specifying seven different pseudo-interventions, which all 24 produce qualitatively similar results. * significant at the .05 level;  significant at the .01 level;  significant at the .001 level.

25 18. Moreover, seven additional models were run specifying seven different pseudo-
 26 interventions. To recall, these pseudo-interventions address the possibility that policy changes

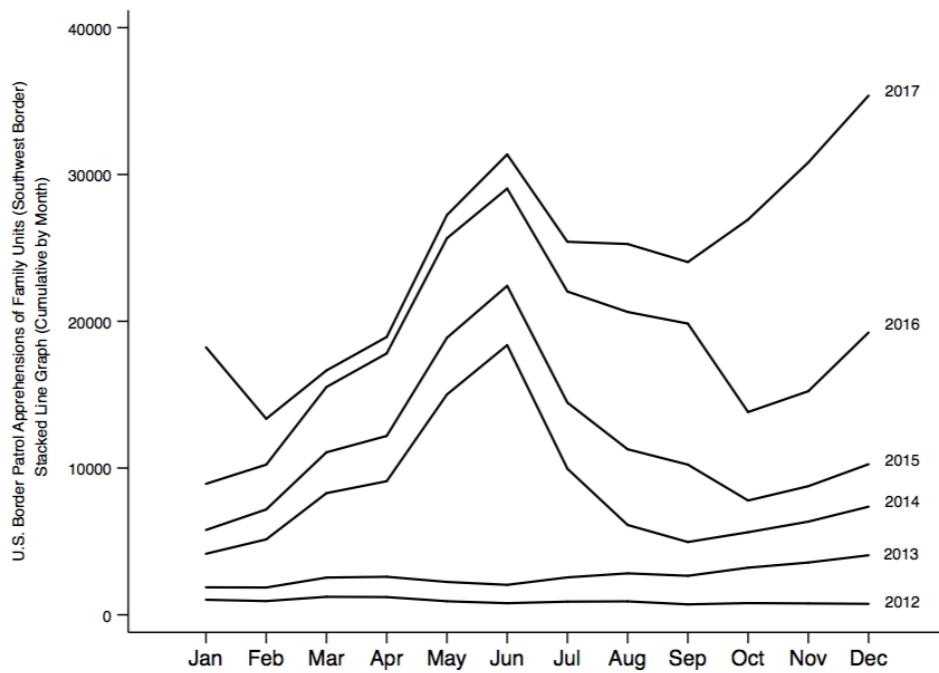

1 need time to take effect. The pseudo-interventions analyzed include the months during the zero
 2 tolerance pilot after July 2017 (August 2017 to November 2017), as well as the three months
 3 after the zero tolerance pilot.¹³ These models produce qualitatively similar results, wherein 4 instead of a deterrent effect, the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family
 5 units at the Southwest border has increased significantly after the zero tolerance pilot, not 6 decreased.

7 19. In my last set of analyses, I turn to the more rigorous Autoregressive Integrated 8 Moving Average (ARIMA) interrupted time series method. ARIMA is the primary method of 9 analyzing quasi-experimental time series data. The ARIMA interrupted time series method 10 removes time trends (the “noise”) in order to isolate the impact of an intervention, such as a 11 policy change (the “signal”). ARIMA modeling begins by identifying and removing noise, 12 meaning the extent to which the data in a time series can be accurately predicted by time itself 13 (for example, addressing the extent to which the number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of 14 family units at the Southwest border in one month can be accurately predicted by the number of 15 apprehensions during the previous month [autocorrelation] or the extent to which the number of 16 U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border in one month can be 17 accurately predicted by the number of apprehensions during the same month in a previous year 18 [seasonality]). After identifying and removing noise, this allows us to evaluate the extent to 19 which an intervention has an effect on our outcome of interest that is independent from 20 underlying time trends. Otherwise put, this allows us to evaluate whether policy changes such as 21 the expanded use of family detention or the use of family separation more accurately predict the 22 monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border
 23 than seasonal patterns or other time trends.

 26 ¹³ These models specify the intervention as August 2017, or September 2017, or October 2017, or November 2017, or December 2017, or January 2018, or February 2018.

¹⁴ These are the years in the time series for which monthly data on U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border are available for all of the months in the year.

21. Table 3 reports the results of the ARIMA interrupted times series analysis. Model 3 shows that after identifying and removing time trends,¹⁵ there is no statistically significant relationship between the expanded use of family detention, measured by the conversion of the Karnes County Residential Center in July 2014, and the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border. Model 4 shows that after identifying and removing time trends,¹⁶ there is no statistically significant relationship between family separations, measured by the beginning of the zero tolerance pilot in July 2017, and the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border. Model 5, which includes both interventions, produces qualitatively similar results.¹⁷

	Model 3	Model 4	Model 5
	ARIMA(1,1,0)	ARIMA(1,1,0)	ARIMA(1,1,0)
July 2014	-.135 (.135)		-.173 (.135)
July 2017		.101 (.197)	.178 (.196)
Observations	79	79	79

Note: fifteen additional models were run specifying fifteen different pseudo-interventions, which all produce qualitatively similar results.

Conclusion

22. Altogether, data on the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border shows that recent policies intended to deter families from attempting to enter the U.S. without authorization have not had their desired deterrent effects.

- As the data show, the expanded use of family detention is not statistically significantly related to decreases in the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the Southwest border. This result is robust when

¹⁷ These results are also robust when testing the range of pseudo-interventions described above.

1 testing eight pseudo-interventions and when using ARIMA interrupted time series 2 analysis.

- 4 • As the data also show, the use of family separation is not statistically significantly 5 related to decreases in the monthly number of U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of 6 family units at the Southwest border; instead, U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of 7 family units at the Southwest border have increased following the zero tolerance
8 pilot. This result is robust when testing seven pseudo-interventions and when using 9 ARIMA interrupted time series analysis.
 - 10 • Moreover, the data show that U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions of family units at the 11 Southwest border has followed seasonal trends, wherein the monthly number of 12 apprehensions increases beginning late Winter (February and March) and continues 13 to increase through Spring (April, May, and June) before declining at the start 14 Summer (July).

15 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California and the United
16 States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

Tom K. Wong. "President Obama's Executive Actions on Immigration and the 2016 Presidential Election." This project uses a nationally representative survey of Latinos ($n = 820$) and Asians ($n = 950$) fielded in late to analyze how knowing someone who is undocumented and potentially eligible for legal status via programs like DAPA affects the civic engagement of Latino and Asian citizens. The survey was fielded by GfK and commissioned w/Dan Hopkins and Efren Perez.

These projects examine how demographic changes are reshaping the American electorate and how policymakers are responding. The former project includes multiple voter mobilization experiments utilizing direct voter contact run during the 2016 presidential cycle. These experiments analyze interventions designed to convey the urgency of voting to Latino, Asian, and immigrant-origin voters using political discourse around immigration policy and refugee admissions.

15 DECLARATION OF MARK
16 GREENBERG IN SUPPORT OF
17 PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR
18 EXPEDITED DISCOVERY

19 I, Mark Greenberg, declare as follows:

20 1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated
21 herein. I joined the Migration Policy Institute (MPI) as a Senior Fellow in July 2017. My work
22 focuses on the intersections of migration policy with human services and social welfare 23 policies. From 2009-17, I worked at the Administration for Children and Families (ACF) in the 24 U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. I served as ACF Deputy Assistant Secretary
25 for Policy from 2009-13; Acting Commissioner for the Administration for Children, Youth, 26 and Families from 2013-15; and Acting Assistant Secretary from 2013-17. ACF includes the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR), which has responsibility for the refugee resettlement and unaccompanied children program. Previously, I was Executive Director of the Georgetown Center on Poverty, Inequality, and Public Policy, a joint initiative of the Georgetown Law Center and Georgetown Public Policy Institute. In addition, I was Executive Director of the Center for American Progress' Task Force on Poverty, and the Director of Policy for the Center for Law and Social Policy (CLASP). I am a graduate of Harvard College and Harvard

1 Law School. If called as a witness, I could and would testify competently to the matters set 2 forth below.

3 2. MPI is an independent, nonpartisan, nonprofit think tank in Washington, DC
 4 dedicated to analysis of the movement of people worldwide. MPI provides analysis, 5 development, and evaluation of migration and refugee policies at local, national, and 6 international levels. It aims to meet the demand for pragmatic and thoughtful responses to the 7 challenges and opportunities that large-scale migration, whether voluntary or forced, presents
 8 to communities and institutions in an increasingly integrated world.

9 3. During the time that I was Acting Assistant Secretary of the Administration for 10 Children and Families (ACF), from October 2013-January 2017, I worked very closely with 11 the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) on many issues concerning the Unaccompanied
 12 Alien Children Program. I worked with both ORR leadership and staff on issues of program
 13 administration and policy development and met with ORR leadership on a weekly or biweekly
 14 basis and frequently talked or corresponded with program leadership or staff numerous times
 15 each day. To the best of my recollection, I visited the Border at least five times during this 16 period, visiting shelters and talking with shelter staff, program staff, and children. In addition 17 to visiting shelters in Texas, I also visited shelters in California and New York while at ACF. I
 18 frequently met with colleagues from Customs and Border Protection (CBP) and Immigration
 19 and Customs Enforcement (ICE) and other parts of the Department of Homeland Security, 20 along with colleagues from the Department of Defense and other federal agencies on aspects of 21 inter-agency coordination. I testified before Senate Committees or Subcommittees four times
 22 concerning the Unaccompanied Alien Children Program during my time as Acting Assistant 23 Secretary.

24 4. Throughout my tenure as ACF Acting Assistant Secretary, it was always my 25 understanding, and I repeatedly stated, that the Unaccompanied Alien Children Program at 26

1 ORR was a program designed to provide shelter and services to children who arrived at the 2 border unaccompanied by a parent or guardian. It is a program with detailed policies to 3 address the circumstances and needs of children arriving unaccompanied. However, to my 4 knowledge, the program has no policies or procedures to address the distinct needs and 5 circumstances or reunification procedures for children who the U.S. government has separated
 6 from their parents, because that was not a purpose of the program before the Zero Tolerance 7 policy was established.

8 5. In the ordinary operation of the Unaccompanied Alien Children Program, 9 children who arrive at the border unaccompanied are apprehended by CBP and placed in CBP
 10 custody until they can be transported to a shelter of a grantee or contractor of the Office of 11 Refugee Resettlement. When they arrive at an ORR shelter, they receive a medical screening 12 and a set of services, including health, mental health, education, case management, recreation, 13 legal screenings, access to religious observances, and other services in accordance with the 14 requirements of the Flores v. Reno consent agreement. While at the shelter, efforts are made to 15 determine if the child has a parent, relative or family friend – referred to as a sponsor - with 16 whom the child can live while awaiting their immigration proceedings. In accordance with 17 applicable law, efforts are made to place the child in the least restrictive setting in the best 18 interest of the child, giving consideration to risk of danger to self or others and risk of flight.

20 6. The policies governing the sponsorship process have historically sought to 21 strike an appropriate balance between the importance of ensuring that sponsor placements are 22 safe and appropriate, and the need to help children move from a shelter to a parent, relative or 23 family friend as rapidly as is prudent, in light of both requirements of the law and the 24 recognition that the best interest of children is to be with their parent, and if that is not possible
 25 with a relative or if necessary a family friend who can care for them in a non-institutional 26 setting.

1 7. Like millions of Americans, I was deeply concerned when I learned about the 2 US Government policy of separating parents and children and sending the children to ORR
 3 custody. In addition, I was concerned about the use of ORR Unaccompanied Alien Children
 4 shelters for this purpose, because as the former Assistant Secretary, based on my experience, I
 5 believe that using the shelters to facilitate family separation is antithetical to the basic goals
 6 and mission of the program. In addition to causing pain for separated families and children, I 7 believe this is likely to create highly stressful work environments for staff in shelters, insofar as 8 they are being asked to perform a function that is virtually the opposite of their customary role 9 of working to reunify children with parents, relatives, and family friends. Moreover, staff are 10 being required to respond to the needs of young and in some instances very young children 11 who are likely to be disconsolate because they do not know where their parent is and why their 12 parent is not with them. I believe the stressful environment is likely to be detrimental to the 13 basic operation of the shelters. The shelters are under additional pressures because of the large 14 numbers of separated children referred to ORR custody within a short period of time.

15 8. From multiple media accounts, it is my understanding that in many cases, 16 parents do not know where their child is, and children do not know where their parent is. I am 17 frankly baffled as to how such a situation has come to be. I do not know the details of the 18 current internal planning process for the Office of Refugee Resettlement, but I do understand
 19 that when a child is referred to ORR by CBP, there is normally narrative information provided
 20 at that time concerning the circumstances of the child's apprehension. If this information 21 included the statement that the parent and child were separated, it should then have been a
 22 straightforward matter for ORR to communicate back to CBP and ICE providing information 23 about the location of the child.

24 9. I have also seen multiple media accounts of difficulties parents are having 25 communicating with their child. I am aware that under the ORR Policy Guide, available at 26

1 https://www.acf.hhs.gov/orr/resource/children-entering-the-united-states-unaccompanied-
 2 section-3#3.3.10, shelters must allow children a minimum of two ten minute calls a week to 3 parents or other family members. That is a minimum, and I believe there is nothing in 4 published ORR policy that would prevent allowing more contact.

5 10. I am aware that under the joint DHS-HHS Policy Statement entitled Zero
 6 Tolerance Prosecution and Family Reunion, dated June 23, 2018, text indicates that parents 7 seeking reunification may proceed to utilize the sponsorship process generally applicable to 8 any prospective sponsor. I was troubled to read this because the ordinary sponsorship process 9 seems highly inappropriate for parents who have recently been forcibly separated from their 10 children.

11 11. The ordinary process for approving a sponsor for an unaccompanied alien child, 12 is described in Section 2 of the ORR Policy Guide, available at 13 https://www.acf.hhs.gov/orr/resource/children-entering-the-united-states-unaccompanied-
 14 section-2#2.1. Under the Policy Guide requirements, a potential sponsor must submit an 15 application, available at 16 https://www.acf.hhs.gov/sites/default/files/orr/frp_3_family_reunification_application_05_14_
 17 18.pdf, be subject to fingerprinting for herself and all adult household members, and then be 18 subject to criminal records checks, immigration checks, and a sex abuse registry check. The 19 approval process would also involve an assessment which would include making inquiries such 20 as the sponsor's motivation for wanting to sponsor the child or youth; the sponsor's
 21 understanding of the unaccompanied alien child's needs, as identified by ORR and the care
 22 provider; the sponsor's plan to provide adequate care, supervision, access to community 23 resources, and housing; and the sponsor's strengths, resources, and mitigating factors in 24 relation to any risks or special concerns of the child. Assessment areas of inquiry are described 25 in Section 2.4.1 of the Policy Guide, available at 26

1 https://www.acf.hhs.gov/orr/resource/children-entering-the-united-states-unaccompanied-
2 section-2#2.4.1.

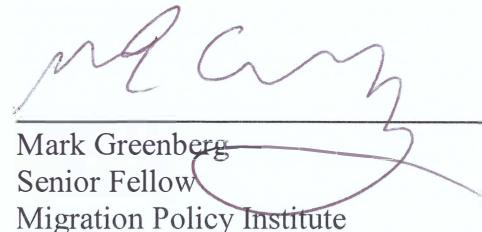

3 12. While such an inquiry may be appropriate for a relative, family friend or parent
4 who has not resided with a child in many years, I believe it is wholly inappropriate for a child
5 who has recently been forcibly separated from her parent by the US Government. Moreover,
6 in my experience, it is a process that may take weeks or months to complete. Because the 7 ORR Policy Guide is simply a statement of policy, not a promulgated rule, I am aware of no
8 reason why ORR could not simply publish revised policy to provide for a streamlined and 9 expedited reunification process.

10 13. Moreover, under ORR policy, https://www.acf.hhs.gov/orr/resource/children-
11 entering-the-united-states-unaccompanied-section-2#2.8.2, if a child is being released to a 12 sponsor and the sponsor cannot come to the facility to receive the child, the sponsor must pay 13 for the cost of transportation for the child, including the cost for a care provider escort if one is 14 needed. During the Obama Administration in periods of significant spikes in numbers of 15 unaccompanied children in ORR care, the Administration waived this requirement as a 16 mechanism to speed up reunited unaccompanied children with the sponsors in the U.S. To my 17 knowledge, the current Administration has not stated that this policy would be waived or 18 modified for children in ORR care due to the family separation policy.

19 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California and the 20 United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

18 LINDSAY LENNOX

19 I, Lindsay Lennox, declare as follows:

20 1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.

21 2. I am an attorney with the Northwest Immigrant Rights Project (NWIRP). I have 22 been with NWIRP for almost three and a half years, and before I joined NWIRP I was a public
23 defender for King County (King County Office of Public Defense/Northwest Defenders 24 Division, formerly Northwest Defenders Association) for over eight years.

25 3. The majority of my current legal practice involves representing non-citizen 26 children under the age of 21 in pending immigration proceedings. In the past 3 years and approximately 5 months, I have handled approximately 80 such cases. I have represented immigrant youth in counties in the State of Washington including King, Pierce, Thurston, Skagit, Mason, Whatcom, Kitsap, and Snohomish counties.

1 4. My clients often reside with Washington sponsors. These sponsors are individual
 2 Washington residents and families who have taken responsibility for the care of my immigrant 3 youth clients while they pursue their immigration cases. Unaccompanied children who are 4 awaiting immigration proceedings (for example the adjudication of an asylum application, visa
 5 approval or adjustment of status), are entitled to access many state-funded programs. For 6 example, my clients use Washington courts. Many of my clients are eligible to apply for Special
 7 Immigrant Juvenile Status (SIJS). The federal immigration system relies on the expertise of state 8 courts in making determinations regarding a child's welfare for purposes of entering the 9 predicate findings for SIJS. Thus, SIJS-eligible children may seek SIJS predicate findings from 10 a state's juvenile court, where the judge determines whether the child qualifies for protection 11 under state child welfare laws. Under statutes and regulations promulgated by the federal 12 government, my clients must obtain an order from state court with these predicate findings before 13 they can pursue that form of congressionally authorized immigration relief.

14 5. Clients I have represented have accessed state courts in counties including King, 15 Pierce, Skagit, Kitsap, Snohomish, Mason, and Whatcom. It is my experience that in some 16 counties, probation officers must first determine that a dependency petition is reasonably
 17 justifiable before the petition may be filed. It is also my experience that Guardians Ad Litem 18 (GALs) are sometimes appointed by the court to appear in dependency cases. Also, in 19 dependency cases, parents are appointed a public defender to represent them. My understanding 20 is that the appearance of GALs and public defenders in the cases relating to immigrant youth are 21 funded with state resources, as are the court facilities and personnel.

22 6. My clients are often eligible for Medicaid through the Apple Health program. My 23 clients often receive medical and mental health care coverage through the State of Washington, 24 and I often encourage them to apply for Medicaid if they are eligible and not otherwise receiving 25 care.

6. My clients are often eligible for Medicaid through the Apple Health program. My clients often receive medical and mental health care coverage through the State of Washington, and I often encourage them to apply for Medicaid if they are eligible and not otherwise receiving care.

7. My clients go to Washington State public schools. For example, my clients have attended schools in the Seattle Public Schools System as well as in the Highline School District. Depending on their individual needs, my clients may access additional state education services, such as ESL programs, special education, mental health services, and other programs delivered within the school district. It is my understanding that such programs are funded in part through local levy funds and state dollars.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of Washington and the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

Plaintiff,

DECLARATION OF JONI KIMOTO

V.

DONALD TRUMP in his official capacity as President of the United States, et al.,

Defendants.

J. Joni Kimoto, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.

2. I was born in Portland, Oregon on November 19, 1938. I have lived in the United States my entire life, and I have lived in Portland for the past 54 years. My grandparents immigrated to this country in the early 1900s to seek a better life, and they settled in Portland. My mother was born in Portland, and my father was born in Seattle.

3. I was 3 years old when World War II started. In January 1942, the government imposed curfews and travel bans on Japanese Americans, including my family. The FBI came to my home and interrogated me and my parents. One FBI agent asked me whether there were any guns in the home. I responded that there were, and showed him two toy pistols. The FBI

1 seized my father's camera, binoculars, and radio because they believed them to be evidence
2 that my family posed a threat to national security.

3 4. In the spring of 1942, my parents were given 10 days to sell their store and pack
4 all of our belongings into three suitcases. We were first taken to the Portland Livestock
5 Exhibition Center, renamed Portland Assembly Center, and housed where animals were 6 previously exhibited and slept on hay mattresses. To this day, I still remember the smell of 7 feces, hay, and livestock.

8 5. In the Fall of 1942, we were put on trains. The curtains on the trains were shut 9 so that we could not see where we were being taken. When we arrived, we were greeted by the 10 military, who escorted us into an encampment with uninsulated barracks. I distinctly 11 remember being surrounded by barbed wire and sentries with guns, and my mother warning me 12 not to get close to the wires because it was not safe.

13 6. During the summer of 1944, we were photographed and fingerprinted like 14 criminals. Only after that were we issued indefinite release cards that allowed us to travel
15 outside of the encampment. My family left on July 9, 1944. I still have a copy of my release 16 card, which has my photograph and fingerprint.

17 7. The policy of separating children from their parents at the border has resonated 18 with me on a deeply personal level, even more so since I understand that fathers are being 19 detained in my home state of Oregon and there may even be children here separated from their 20 parents. It reminds me of my experiences of being taken from my home and put in an 21 incarceration camp, causing me to experience psychological distress. In both situations, the 22 government is imprisoning people without due process. The only difference is that, in my 23 situation, I had my parents to comfort me. I can only imagine the trauma these children must 24 be experiencing upon separation from their parents. It is heart breaking and frightening to 25 think about.

8. I understand that now the federal government is planning to detain people in military camps, just as my family and I were imprisoned in camps that were guarded by the army. It makes me wonder, how is it possible that we did not learn from what we did to Japanese Americans in World War II? I feel a lot of despair because it is happening again.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of Washington and the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

12 DECLARATION OF EVELYN

14 v.

15 DONALD TRUMP in his official
16 capacity as President of the United 17 States, et al.,

18 Defendants.

19 I, Evelyn Banko, declare as follows:

20 1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated
21 herein.

22 2. As an Oregon resident, survivor of the Nazi Holocaust, and former child
23 refugee, I provide this declaration to explain how the federal government's family-separation
24 policy affects me and other people in Oregon who survived the Holocaust.

25 3. I was born in Vienna, Austria, in January 1936. My mother at that time was a 26 housewife and my father was a trained engineer who owned an auto-part import business.

27 4. One day in the spring of 1938, my father received a tip that he should not go 28 home that night, because the Nazis had recently invaded Austria and were entering 29 neighborhoods to round up and deport Jews.

1 5. My parents were forced to liquidate their business and make plans to flee the 2 country. Because we did not have an "affidavit of support" from an American citizen, we were 3 unable to travel immediately to the United States.

4 6. Although we were in fact refugees, we were forced to use a tourist visa in order
5 to flee the country. We traveled to Riga, Latvia, as if on vacation. We stayed there for two 6 years while my parents learned new job skills in order to support our family.

7 7. Many of my relatives were not able to escape the Nazis. For example, in the 8 early 1940s, my mother's younger brother fled to Vichy France, but he was detained there in a 9 concentration camp. He was sent from there to Auschwitz and then to Buchenwald, where he 10 died. My father's sister, her husband, and several of my cousins fled to Yugoslavia, but they 11 were detained and sent to Jasenovac, where they died. My grandparents fled to 12 Czechoslovakia, but they were deported from there to a concentration camp in Poland, where 13 they died.

14 8. My family ultimately obtained the necessary documentation to leave Latvia in 15 1939, via one of the Nordic states. However, the Nazis bombed Norway and the sea was full 16 of German U-Boats, so we were unable to leave.

17 9. Later in 1939, my family attempted again to flee Latvia, this time through Italy.
18 But by then, the United Kingdom had declared war on Germany, and Italy was allied with 19 Germany, so we were unable to travel through Italy.

20 10. By 1940, the Russians had occupied Latvia. For whatever reason, the Russian 21 authorities allowed my family to leave.

22 11. In September of 1940, we boarded a train and traveled across the trans-siberian 23 railway to Manchuria—a journey that took many weeks. From Manchuria, we traveled to 24 Japan.

1 12. About a month after fleeing Latvia, we were able to travel by sea to Seattle.
2 The voyage was very rough. We were stuck in the bottom of the boat, sailed through a 3 typhoon, and I contracted whooping cough. I spent much of the trip bedridden, calling out for 4 my father.

5 13. Our first stop in North America after crossing the Pacific Ocean was in 6 Vancouver, British Columbia. We were unable to leave the ship though because the United 7 Kingdom was at war with Germany and we had German passports.

8 14. We finally landed in Seattle on September 24, 1940. However, we were told 9 that we could not stay in Seattle because the city's "quota" for Jewish immigrants was "full."

10 15. Fortunately, we were given the options of traveling to Portland or San 11 Francisco. My parents decided that we should settle in Portland because it was a smaller city 12 and they thought that they could have more luck finding employment. They also loved the 13 mountains in the Pacific Northwest, which reminded them of our native Austria.

14 16. We settled in Portland as planned, where my mother got a job sewing sports 15 clothes. My father began working 14 to 16-hour days at a service station, six days per week, to 16 support our family.

17 17. I then grew up in Portland like any American child, attending preschool, 18 elementary school, and then high school. I went to college at the University of Oregon and 19 became a teacher. I later obtained my Masters in Education at Lewis and Clark College.

20 18. I was a teacher in the Portland-area for 33 years. After I retired from teaching, I 21 began volunteering my time to speak about my experiences in World War II. I have been 22 speaking about those experiences for 25 years now, often at organizations such as the Oregon
23 Jewish Museum & Center for Holocaust Education in Portland.

1 19. As a survivor of the Holocaust and former child refugee, I find the actions of the 2 federal government—in particular, the policy of separating children from their parents at the 3 border—to be very frightening.

4 20. The federal government's family-separation policy, especially when viewed in 5 combination with President Trump's hateful rhetoric about immigrants, reminds me of what 6 was happening in Europe when I was a child.

7 21. I grew up thinking of America as a welcoming country. I believed in the words
 8 inscribed on the Statue of Liberty. But now I ask myself, what sort of country separates 9 children from their parents? The policy is heartless, cruel, and undemocratic.

10 22. The separation policy is particularly distressing to me as a Holocaust survivor 11 because I have personally known many survivors who were separated from their parents by the 12 Nazis, never to see their parents again.

13 23. Even if parents and children are eventually reunited, I know, as a Holocaust
 14 survivor, that the pain of separation can be life-long. For example, I have learned of one
 15 survivor who was forced to give up her very young child to another woman when the Nazis
 16 were advancing. Although the woman and her child were reunited after the war, the child did
 17 not remember the mother, and did not want to go with her. There was always a disconnect 18 between them after that. The damage had been done and could not be repaired.

19 24. The things I see in the news remind me of such painful stories. For example,
 20 another Portland-area survivor named Miriam Greenstein—who only recently passed away—21 was separated from her family at Auschwitz and never saw her parents again. She was able to 22 settle in the United States after the war because she happened to have memorized the telephone
 23 number of an American relative. I heard on the news recently about a child who was separated 24 from her family at the border, but who also had memorized the telephone number of a relative.
 25 When I hear stories such as these, the parallels between what the federal government is doing 26 and what the Nazis did to children become impossible to ignore.

1 25. The policy also makes me very distressed when I hear President Trump
 2 describe immigrants as “criminals.” This sort of rhetoric is ridiculous. Because of my own
 3 experience fleeing the Nazis, I know what it takes for a family to make the long and difficult
 4 journey to escape persecution and violence. The people at the border are coming here to seek 5 asylum. They are not criminals but refugees—just like I was. The idea that a family would go 6 through something so difficult just to come here and commit crimes is absurd, and reeks of the 7 propaganda employed by the Nazi regime.

8 26. The profound distress that I feel these days is not unique to me. I grew up in a 9 community of Jewish refugees here in Portland. Among those who are still alive today, such 10 fear, pain, and disbelief are widespread.

11 27. We Holocaust survivors feel this pain because we see the similarities between 12 what is happening now and what was happening in the early stages of Nazi Germany, with the 13 passage of the Nuremberg Laws in the 1930s.

14 28. I know that prejudice always exists, in some people, under the surface. But the 15 Trump Administration is making it okay to hate again. And that is what is so frightening to 16 me.

17 29. The actions of the Trump Administration—including the family-separation 18 policy—have given people permission to hate openly. Spontaneous expressions of hatred have 19 become accepted. At best, the Administration tolerates such expressions. At worst, the 20 Administration actively encourages them. And the people are beginning to tolerate or 21 encourage such hatred, as well. I know all too well that this is how it starts—the normalization 22 of hatred and brutality.

23 30. Frankly, it is hard for me to see a significant difference between the actions of 24 the Administration and the early actions of the Nazis—to say nothing of the parallels between 25 the federal government’s family-separation policy and the separation of children from their 26 parents in the Nazi death camps.

31. I fear very much for the future of this country. I also fear very much for the safety of minority communities who are being obviously targeted by the Trump Administration.

32. I simply cannot believe that this is happening here, in America, in this day and age. For me and other survivors of the Holocaust, it feels like the horrors of World War II are beginning all over again.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of Washington and the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

STATE OF WASHINGTON,

NO. 2:18-cv-00939-RAJ

Plaintiff,

DECLARATION OF JUDY MARGLES

V.

DONALD TRUMP in his official capacity as President of the United States, et al.,

Defendants.

I, Judy Margles, declare as follows:

I. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of the facts stated herein.

2. I am the Director of the Oregon Jewish Museum and Center for Holocaust

Education (OJMCHE), a non-profit museum and educational institution in Portland, Oregon.

In that capacity, I manage the exhibitions, educational resources, public programs, finances, and the archives and collections of the museum. I also have a Master's Degree in history and graduate certificate in museum studies from New York University.

3. The mission of OJMCHE is to explore the legacy of the Jewish experience in Oregon and to teach the universal lessons of the Holocaust. Through exhibitions, programs, educational resources, and opportunities for intercultural conversation, OJMCHE challenges its visitors to resist indifference and discrimination and to envision a just and inclusive world.

1 4. As stewards of the Oregon Holocaust Memorial in Portland's Washington Park,
 2 OJMCHE also brings thousands of school children to both the Memorial and to the Museum.
 3 We believe that the Holocaust provides one of the most effective subjects for examining basic 4 moral concerns, because it simultaneously addresses universal issues of intolerance and the 5 dangers of denying diversity. For many young Oregonians, an OJMCHE program has been 6 their first encounter with the history of the Holocaust.

7 5. The Nazi practice of separating children from their parents at concentration
 8 camps—or, perhaps most infamously, at extermination camps such as Auschwitz—is painfully 9 well-known to history and requires little elaboration here. The practice resulted in the 10 separation of many thousands of families during the war, many of whom were never reunited.

11 6. OJMCHE and its predecessor institutions have worked closely with many 12 Holocaust survivors in Oregon. For example, it is common for children on school trips to visit 13 the Museum, specific exhibitions, the Memorial, or public workshops in our auditorium.
 14 Indeed, approximately 12,000 such students have visited our facilities this year alone. When 15 the children arrive, they are greeted by a docent—often a Holocaust survivor or a descendent 16 of a survivor.

17 7. OJMCHE also maintains a Holocaust Speakers Bureau. Through this bureau, 18 we send Holocaust survivors or survivor-descendants to schools throughout the Pacific 19 Northwest region, to speak about their stories.

20 8. I have personally known and worked with many survivors through my work at 21 OJMCHE.

1 9. As far back as the 2016 presidential campaign, people were making
 2 comparisons in the news and other avenues of public discourse between the rhetoric employed
 3 by then-candidate Trump and that employed by Nazi Germany. Although we recognized the 4 parallels, we actually resisted the comparison quite strongly and for quite some time. In part,
 5 we were aware that comparisons to Nazi Germany are likely to be dismissed out of hand as 6 hyperbolic or offensive.

7 10. That said, from my perspective as Director of OJMCHE, we are witnessing the 8 federal government adopt and pursue a policy of slow dehumanization of others that has 9 chilling parallels to the early years of the Nazi regime. In fact, between 1933 and 1945, the 10 Nazis enacted approximately 450 laws intended to dehumanize Jews.

11 11. Similarly, I see the Administration pursuing practices and policies and using 12 language aimed at dehumanizing people. The separation of children from their families is 13 dehumanizing. The President and his Administration's rhetoric about immigrants is 14 dehumanizing. To be clear, it is not my intent to appear to be predicting some form of 15 genocide in America. However, as Director of an institution dedicated to historical memory, I 16 believe we must learn from history so as not to repeat it. This requires us to work against the 17 ways in which oppression manifests, even in its earliest forms.

18 12. The parallels that I perceive, and the distress that I feel personally as a result of 19 those parallels, is shared among the Holocaust survivor and survivor-descendant community in 20 Oregon. There is a pervasive sense of despair and a profound anxiety in our community.

21 13. Particularly among survivors who were separated from their parents in the 22 camps, there is much grief and heartache. Such survivors have never forgotten, and, in my 23 experience, have never truly healed from the experience of family separation despite the 24 decades that have passed.

14. Such survivors who learn of children separated from their parents at our Southwestern border are sickened by what they are seeing. They understand that the pain and terror felt by these children is the same pain and terror that they felt during World War II. This causes them profound stress and anxiety.

15. In one recent discussion with a survivor who was separated from her family in the camps, the survivor referred to the federal government's family-separation policy as an "awful inhumanity" and "like a repetition of history." This survivor was seven years old when she was separated from her mother. Even though she was one of the lucky ones who was reunited with her mother after the war, she has never forgotten what it was like to have been separated from her mother and she is grief-stricken when she thinks about what the federal government is doing. She maintains that the suffering and anxiety that she endured as a child has never left her—indeed, that is what she tells people when they ask her how it is that she can remember something that happened to her when she was only seven. Her husband, who was 15 years old when he was separated from his mother in the camps, was not one of the lucky ones; he never saw his mother again. This couple has been discussing the family-separation policy in recent days and the experience for them is very painful.

16. I feel an urgent necessity to speak out, to prevent the repetition of history, and it is in that spirit that I provide this declaration to the Court.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington and the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

DATED this 28 day of June, 2018 at Portland, Oregon.

Exhibit B: The History of Child Separation in order to Deter Actions by Parents with Respect to Native Children in the United States and Purported Leftists in Latin America

1. The current policy of separating children from their parents in order to deter border crossers is not the first time that the U.S. federal government has separated children from their parents in order to achieve a political goal. It also separated Native American children from their parents as a strategy to end the Indian Wars of the nineteenth century. Child separation was also the policy of a number of Latin American dictators and paramilitaries in the mid-twentieth century, which sought to terrorize communities thought to be involved in insurgencies and to avoid the raising of another generation of “reds.”
2. In each of these instances, people of conscience found these policies abhorrent, and activists and government policy-makers reformed them.

Native American Child Separation

3. Beginning in the late 1870s, separating Native children from their families and communities was foundational to federal policy to “civilize” the savage, to teach children English, and to extinguish traditional religions, tribal organization, and ways of life.
4. On July 20, 1867, during a pause in the Indian Wars, Congress established the Indian Peace Commission to negotiate with Plains Indian tribes who were warring with the United States in order to secure frontier settlements, land for agriculture, mining and mineral rights, and to allow for the building of the railroads. The Peace Commission met in St. Louis, Missouri, on August 6, 1867, and traveled throughout the contested lands, from Missouri to the Dakotas to California. The Commissioners argued that lasting peace was contingent upon separating Indians regarded as "hostile" from those regarded as friendly, removing all Indian tribes onto reservations away from the routes of U.S. westward expansion, and making provision for their maintenance.¹

5. The official report of the Commission to the President of the United States, dated January 7, 1868, described numerous social and legal injustices to Indians, repeated violations of numerous treaties, including settlement on their land, acts of corruption by many of the local agents, and culpability of Congress in failing to fulfill certain legal obligations. Members of the Commission charged that employees of the railroad were shooting down Indians "in wonton cruelty."
6. The purpose of detailing these depredations by whites was to inaugurate a new policy: of civilizing the Indians in order to secure their lands, build new settlement, expand agriculture and mining. The Commission said that beyond the dishonesty, massacres, and unkindness of whites, the problem was also "the tribal or clannish organization" of Native people, and their failure to speak English. And so the Commission proposed the following plan:
"Agriculture and manufactures should be introduced among them as rapidly as possible; schools should be established which children should be required to attend; their barbarous dialects should be blotted out and the English language substituted...The object of greatest solicitude should be to break down the prejudices of tribe among the Indians; to blot out the boundary lines which divide them into distinct nations, and fuse them into one homogeneous mass. Uniformity of language will do this -- nothing else will.”²

7. The proposal of the Peace Commission, in short, was to shift Native economies to those that would integrate well with the United States and require a much smaller land base (and one that could be held by individuals, rather than tribes, making it easier for whites to buy or take the land), through boarding school education. This was, ultimately, exactly what happened as a result of the Dawes Act and boarding school policy. It is estimated that the land base of Indian country was depleted from 138 million acres of treaty land in 1887 to a mere 48 million acres when allotment was finally halted in 1934, of which 20 million of the remaining land was desert or semi-desert.³

8. The shift from warfare to schools that could exterminate “barbarous dialects” and teach children to farm, however, was not fully taken up for nearly another decade, until after open warfare between the Sioux (or Dakota/Lakota) and the US Cavalry flared again in a dispute over mining in the Black Hills, sacred to the Lakota, in a war that included the defeat of the 7th Cavalry at the Battle of Little Bighorn (“Custer’s last stand.”). U. S. Grant annexed the Black Hills in 1877, after a military “surge” and great loss of life on both sides, including the culmination of an effort to starve Native peoples through the slaughter of buffalo and demoralize them through assaults on women and children. Various chiefs of the Sioux federation sought peace, including Red Cloud (Oglala) and Spotted Tail (Sicangu), though the Sioux never ceded the Black Hills (even when the US carved presidents' faces in them and renamed one the Mount Rushmore National Monument).⁴

9. When it became clear that final military victory would remain elusive, the US federal government finally substituted boarding schools for the Cavalry. In 1878, the War Department ordered Lieutenant Richard Pratt to go Dakota Territory to begin the work of Indian education, specifically contacting "friendly" chiefs, Red Cloud and Spotted Tail, and taking children as "hostages for the good behavior of their people."⁵ Pratt was chosen because of his experience commanding a Black Cavalry regiment in Oklahoma ("Buffalo soldiers"), and experiments in the education and discipline of Indian prisoners from the Red Hills War at Fort Marion in St. Augustine, Florida, and at Hampton Institute. The Fort Marion prisoners were considered singularly uncivilized and hostile, and Pratt had succeeded by mixing tribes, having Indians of different tribes guard and discipline each other, cutting their hair, teaching them English, compelling them to clean and cook, and instituting military drills and tribunals (in which some prisoners sent others to the dungeon) and forcing prisoners to attend church. (He also participated in torturing and killing some of them.)⁶ In 1879, while still on active duty, he opened the Carlisle Indian School, using many of these same practices and taking Dakota children far away to Pennsylvania and teaching them English, farming, and Anglo-American ways of living. Children were prevented from returning home during the summer months, because of concerns that they would revert to “savagery,” and were instead distributed to local households—girls to do housework, boys to farm. Pratt relied on military-style drills, corporal punishment, and capture and incarceration of runaways to enforce his educational methods. Epidemics of cholera, influenza, and tuberculosis devastated children’s numbers there, and many were buried in a cemetery on the grounds. Pratt’s goal, he said, was to “kill the Indian to save the man”—eliminate children’s “Indian-ness” as an alternative to warfare and extermination.⁷

10. Following the success of Pratt and the War Department, Christian missionaries and civil society “Friends of the Indian” groups began opening larger numbers of boarding schools in the 1880s to “civilize” indigenous peoples. In 1881, Congress declared school attendance for Indian children compulsory, and authorized the Indian Bureau to deny benefits guaranteed by treaty right if children failed to attend; they were to “withhold rations, clothing, and other articles from those parents who resisted sending their children to school.”⁸ Indian boarding schools spread through the West and Midwest. “Before and after” photos were popular throughout the United States to show the process of “civilizing” Indian children. Boarding school photos circulated like trophies among whites. As American Indian Studies scholar K. Tsianina Lomawaima writes, “The famous ‘before and after’ pictures of Carlisle students are as much a part of American iconography as the images of Custer’s Last Stand. ‘Savages’ shed buckskin, feathers, robes, and moccasins; long black hair was shorn or bobbed or twisted into identical, “manageable” styles; pinafores, stiff starched collars, stockings, and black oxfords signified the ‘new woman.’⁹

11. The process of separating Native children from their parents was often violent and involved children as young as five or six. One witness, writing in 1930, reported on conditions on the Navajo (Diné) reservation. “In the fall the government stockmen, farmers, and other employees go out into the back country with trucks and bring in the children to school...the wild Navajos, far back in the mountains, hide their children at the sound of a truck. So stockmen, Indian police, and other mounted men are sent ahead to round them up. The children are caught, often roped like cattle, and taken away from their parents, many times never to return... I have heard too many stories of cowboys running down children and bringing them hogtied to town to think it is all an accident...They are transferred from school to school, given white people's names, forbidden to speak their own tongue, and when sent to distant schools are not taken home for three years."

Some, especially children who ran away, would be taken across the country and did not return until they were 16 or 18.¹⁰

12. Tribes, and occasionally even white lawyers and courts, were shocked by the violence of the Pratt system of Indian education and the removal of Indian children. In 1899, a federal district court granted a writ of habeas corpus to an Iowa tribe that demanded the return of Native child from a boarding school in 1899, suggesting an alternative trajectory that might have ended boarding schools much sooner had it been followed. It found that tribes had to consent to the removal of a child.¹¹

13. Nevertheless, federal agents and missionaries ignored this court order and continued to promote compulsory off-reservation boarding schools, in some places until the late 1970s,¹² arguing that it was essentially to the civilization process. Few Native children attended day schools or lived at home. Living on the reservation, especially with their parents, meant that children would revert to "savagery" by night, undoing the good work of the school's civilizing mission by day.¹³ Visits home were also seen to impede the assimilation process, and were discouraged as a matter of policy.¹⁴ Instead, children across the country were “farmed out” in the summers, boys working as ranch hands and farm laborers, girls doing domestic labor.¹⁵

14. Scholars agree that the regimens at boarding schools were harsh. Children were punished, often beaten, for speaking indigenous languages; dress was carefully monitored and checked by staff.¹⁶ Some scholars have suggested that sexual abuse of both girls and boys was rife in boarding schools; an investigation into sexual abuse in boarding schools in Canada in the 1970s resulted in 3,400 complaints of sexual abuse. No similar investigation took place in the United States, although some have argued that any full inquiry into the crimes in U.S. Indian boarding schools would find not only starvation, but also medical experimentation, involuntary sterilization of girls, and physical punishment that amounted to torture.¹⁷ A recent survey of boarding school attendees found that nearly 30% reported that they had been sexually abused there.¹⁸

15. Yet there was one official inquiry into boarding schools in the United States. Throughout the 1920s, Indian policy reform advocates ran ever-more vociferous campaigns about the horrors of Indian policy, including ongoing land-theft, detribalization, and the suppression of Native culture, language, and religious practices, and insisting that child-separation and boarding school policies were a keystone. As a result of this public pressure, Hubert Work, the Secretary of the Interior commissioned an independent report by the Institute for Government Research, aiming to prove that the public campaign was rank exaggeration. The 1928 report, The Problem of Indian Administration, (better-known as the Meriam Report, for its author), suggested that things were, if anything, worse than the press accounts had had it, with special reference to boarding schools. It described children living in overcrowded dormitories, without even adequate toilet facilities at times, subsisting on a vastly inadequate diet, subject to terrible health conditions, ill-clad. Boarding schools “operated below any reasonable standard of health and decency,” as Lewis Meriam wrote. Children suffered high rates of illness and death, and were subject to a curriculum of little value; the report noted continued high rates of illiteracy. They had virtually no leisure time, and were forced to do manual labor to support the school (in apparent violation of child labor laws, the report noted). It urgently recommended that children be returned to their parents and communities. “The continued policy of removing Indian children from the home and placing them for years in boarding schools largely disintegrates the family and interferes with developing normal family life.”¹⁹

16. The report's effect was electric. President Hoover immediately and publicly increased the allocation to boarding schools for food and clothing for children. Within a few years, a leader of the reform campaign, John Collier, was heading up the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and introduced significant changes designed to recognize tribal organization and Native religion and culture, halt the reduction of the land base of Indian Country, and close boarding schools in favor of day schools.²⁰

17. The effects of boarding schools on children and Native communities was devastating. Mortality rates among children were very high. Those children who did return had often forgotten their native language and sometimes had no language in common with their parents. As one agent with the Indian Service, Dane Coolidge, noted, "Back in the hogans of their people the returned school[children] are quite unfitted for their life...They start in all over again to learn to spin and weave and handle their sheep and goats."²¹ Many attribute high rates of violence, family dysfunction, alcoholism, and drug abuse among some Native communities to the legacies of the boarding school experience, and the fact that for years, few Indian children were raised by their parents. One scholar wrote, "I have attended several Native wellness workshops in which participants are asked to draw a family tree that shows the generation in their family in which violence, substance abuse, and other related problems develop. Almost invariably, these problems began with the generation that first went to boarding school.”²² In the 1970s, the American Psychiatric Association published an influential editorial that called boarding schools “a hazard to mental health.”²³ In 1977, psychiatrist Joseph Westermeyer testified before Congress that the American Indian family was in “crisis” as a result of the “ravages” of boarding schools and other familial separations, citing alcoholism and suicide attempts by parents who lost their children.²⁴

18. The legacy of boarding schools lives in people who are currently alive and among us. Although day schools became more common in the 1930s, and boarding schools were largely phased out in the 1970s, the harm of being separated from parents at a young age continues into the present. In 1974, a survey by the American Association of Indian Affairs found one in three Native children separated from their parents, either in boarding school, foster care, or adoptions.²⁵ That number had actually risen by 1987, when another survey found even higher rates of children separated from their Indian parents.²⁶ Scholars, mental health professionals, and activists may debate the proportions in which this is a legacy of policy—the habit of and deeply ingrained belief in separating Native children from parents—or familial pain in the aftermath of the trauma of the boarding school experience. Regardless, it is amply clear that Indian families continue to suffer as a result of federal policy that separated children from parents, even many generations later.

19. When children who had been separated at early ages from their parents grew into adults, they passed their trauma to their own children. In 2006, mental health professionals who surveyed nearly 500 Native American adults and youth found not only that the boarding school attendees in the group had much-elevated rates of suicide attempts, alcoholism, and drug abuse, but that children raised by boarding school attendees “are significantly more likely to have a general anxiety disorder, experience posttraumatic stress disorder symptoms, and have suicidal thoughts in their lifetime compared to others.”²⁷

Latin America’s Child Separation Policies

20. Right-wing dictatorships in Latin America in the 1970s, 80s, and 90s also kidnapped children and placed them in adoptions in the context of civil wars.

These governments received backing from the United States, although it is unclear whether there was also support for the deliberate separation of children. Ultimately, however, human rights activists uncovered—and continue to uncover—these practices and reunified children with their parents and biological relatives. In Argentina, activists have found 117 of the estimated 500 children who were taken from their leftist parents during the military dictatorship from 1976-1983—separated either at the time of left activists’ murder or incarceration, or later, after the rape and torture of women prisoners had resulted in the birth of a child. Members of the military described the goals of the program in two ways, either as a desire to prevent the children from learning to be “subversives” from their parents, or to frighten leftists into desisting.²⁸ The actions of the Madres de Plaza de Mayo and the Abuelas de Plaza de Mayo (mothers and grandmothers of the Central Square in Argentina) has resulted in the creation of a DNA database that has, in many cases, helped identify these children (in adulthood) and restore some relationship to their natal family. The harm of the adoption has generally been found to have been greater than learning the truth, but the experience has been deeply traumatizing. As geneticists Victor B. Penchaszadeh wrote, “The emotional shock experienced by the children when learning that the adults who were raising them had been, at a minimum, accomplices in the disappearance and murder of their parents, was of great magnitude in all cases. Initial disbelief and feelings of despair led some older children and adolescents initially to resist.”²⁹

All but a few, however, have reigned ties with their natal parents’ surviving family.

21. In Central America’s Northern Triangle (Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras), there is a significant history of militaries and paramilitaries punishing civilians for their actions or beliefs (or purported beliefs) through murder and terror. The US-backed Guatemalan and Salvadoran right-wing governments’ government’s policy of “disappearing” civilians in the 1970s, 80s, and 90s is well-known. Between 1954 and 1968, during the Guatemalan Civil War, an estimated 40,000 to 50,000 people were disappeared by the government, accused of backing leftist insurgents. (Many of these people were undoubtedly innocent, guilty of nothing more than belonging to certain indigenous groups, as the actual insurgency was quite small.) In Salvador, right-wing death squads killed as many as 35,000 civilians between 1980-83.³⁰ Honduras’ death squad from the 1980s, Battalion 316, killed or disappeared hundreds. It is widely believed to be operating again today in the aftermath of the 2009 (and 2017) coups d’état.³¹

22. Less well-documented but increasingly important to international publics is the story of children disappeared in Guatemala and Salvador during the armed internal conflicts. Some were smuggled into international adoptions. Over time, documentation, identification, and sometimes reunions of Central American children disappeared during the war has grown steadily. In Guatemala, for example, a very multilingual country where many indigenous communities were wiped out and where distant mountainous communities were often unconnected to cities, the documentation process has been slow. In 1998, the official Truth Commission took testimony about 183 children kidnapped by militaries and paramilitaries during the war, but believed there were many more that the government should search for.³² The Archbishop's Commission on Human Rights initially documented 216 disappeared children, then, in a later report, 444.³³ When the government continued to refuse to search for children disappeared, a number of NGOs came together to document cases, forming a single group, Todos por el Reencuentro (All for Reunification) which found 650 cases, arranged for 200 people to meet the families from which they had been separated, and estimated the total numbers of cases to be numbered in the thousands.³⁴

23. Human rights groups in El Salvador and Guatemala have collected testimony of survivors, such as the follow story from Jacinto Guzmán in Guatemala. He told Todos:

“In 1983, because of the armed conflict and the scorched earth policy that General Efraín Ríos Montt directed against the population of Nebaj, soldiers captured me at the Sumal Grande mountain. At that time I was nine years old... During the years I was separated from my family I suffered a lot because the person who adopted me treated me very badly. I wasn’t given food, I was beaten for every little thing, I was discriminated against because I didn’t understand or speak Spanish...it was a lot of suffering that I lived through. I couldn’t stand all that mistreatment.”³⁵

Guzmán did not see his family again for 19 years, until he was 28.

24. His mother, Petrona Santiago, also provided testimony about the “acts of genocide” against indigenous people, including the taking of children:

“Before the war we lived in the village of Vijolom. There we had a little ranch, our cornfield and some animals. In 1982 the soldiers came among us and began to kill the people, burned the house, destroyed the crops with a machete, killed and stole the animals. We were terrified and for that reason we fled to the mountain, we hid ourselves, but the soldiers stayed a long time in that place. Afterward we went further, into the mountain of Sumal Grande, but our tortillas ran out, we had no food, we had no salt, now all we ate was grass with the children. For this reason one day in the morning, my late husband told me that he was going to go look for potatoes to eat, because if he did not go the children were going to die of hunger. I remember that that day Jacinto left with his father to help him, but, according to my late husband, there was a lot of fog and he didn't see that the soldiers were hidden in the mountains. They came out and grabbed him and Jacinto, who was nine, and then they didn't come back. From that moment on, I cried constantly. Suddenly, after four days, my late husband came back alone and I asked him where Jacinto was, and he said that he had stayed with the soldiers, that they didn't want to release him. I only remember that I became very sad and began to cry for my son. There were times when I thought maybe they were going to let him go and I was going to wait for him; but my Jacinto never came back. Thus they took my Jacinto.”³⁶

25. In the decade after 2000, Todos published three books of testimony about disappeared, adopted, and (sometimes) reunited children.³⁷ For example, a father who lost his children in 1984, Tomás Choc relates:

“The army surprised us when we were in Guacamayas, Uspantán. It was a day in which the army surprised the [community’s] look-outs, and when we knew what was happening, there were soldiers throughout the camp. Bullets flew everywhere. The only thing we could do was to go out running. When we succeeded in liberating ourselves from the danger of the soldiers, we started to look for our children. After a few hours I ran into the terrible surprise that the children were not with my wife. She didn't have more than one of our four children. We looked for them all night and all the next day, but nothing...We spent several weeks looking for them but failed. Sometimes it was me who gave up hope and cried, and when she saw me, my wife also collapsed. Other times it was her; she would cry and her sorrow was contagious to me.³⁸

Years later, he would find one daughter, Ana, married to a soldier; the children had been adopted by families in other indigenous highlands communities. But it was not until 2001, and with the help of Todos, that he would learn the fates of all of them. The youngest, he learned from the adoptive family, had sickened and died. The two other daughters, they found.

26. Choc's story points up one of the features that made the Guatemalan experience of losing children so painful: even if they could be found, not only were they grown strangers, but almost always they had lost their mother tongue, and adopted the identity of a different indigenous or ethnic group. "The experience of being reunited with my daughter made me realize the harm the war did to the whole family. In addition to the death of my wife, [my children] Magdalena and Jose, this violence changed us, made us different from each other. Today my children have other [indigenous or ethnic] identities: Ana is Ladina [Spanish/mestizo], Julia is Q'eqchi, Catarina is Kiché," said Choc, who is Ixil.³⁹ His children, like many found by Todos por el Reencuentro, had been kidnapped by members of the paramilitary civil patrols (PACs).⁴⁰

27. Another Maya-Ixil man, Pedro Santiago, told of trying to reconstruct a relationship with his daughter in the aftermath of her forced disappearance. In 1984, he and his three-year old daughter Rosa were wounded by the same bullet as he carried her on his back and they were caught in a shower of bullets from soldiers. Both were taken to the hospital, but separately. Rosa was picked up by the military and left in another hospital, while her father searched for her in the first, and she was subsequently adopted by a family from Aguacatán, Huehuetenango. It was twenty-one years before Pedro Santiago saw her again, and she arrived for the reunion with her parents wearing the traditional clothing [traje] of another indigenous group. For Santiago, seeing his daughter in the “wrong” traje was an event invested with significance.

“The day that they were coming, early in the morning some of our brothers from the evangelical church came, and all morning we had a musical group and a religious service to give thanks to God for the life of our daughter. My wife and other women from the community started making little tamales really early. I think that they had made a thousand tamales, maybe more. They killed a chicken and made a stew. At about noon three cars arrived. Then we lit fireworks and went to meet Rosa. She arrive wearing traje from Aguacatán and her three daughters with traje from Cobán. When I saw her...my eyes filled with water and she hugged me. After that my wife received her and her husband. It was a really happy thing and it brought tears from us. Then we began the activities...[they prayed, told stories about their lives]. Afterward, my wife took Rosa inside the house and together with other women they dressed her as an Ixil. For us it is very important that one day little Rosa returns to her traje from Nebaj and I hope that she can learn to speak our language, because now she can't.⁴¹

28. When Rosa narrated the story from her point of view, she too dwelt on the traje, the symbol of her lost Ixil identity.

"When we got there, there were like two hundred people in my parents' house, they had arranged everything for me. Later I understood that many were my family members. My family sure is big! Many people spoke; my father spoke to everybody in Ixil and Don Pedro [from Todos] was translating for us so I could understand; my father told how they shot at us both, but the best was to realize that my family had always loved me and that they too had suffered because of the war. They dressed me in Ixil traje; I was nervous but I liked it...in front of everyone they put a wide ribbon through my hair. After that, many of the people who were there came by and greeted me and gave me money, gifts, food. I was very emotional."⁴²

However, distance, poverty, and differences of language prevented them from seeing each other again after that day.

29. In El Salvador, the Catholic Church was actively involved in searching for and documenting, the disappearance of children. In 1989, six Jesuit priests were killed in the middle of the night by the military with their housekeeper and daughter, were killed. One member of that community, Father Jon Cortina, was away on a pastoral visit to a community, and survived. He went on, five years later, to found Pro Búsqueda de Niñas y Niños Desaparecidos, a search group for the children disappeared by the military during the war.⁴³

⁴¹ Liga Guatemalteca de Higiéne Mental, Corazones., 40-41.

⁴² Ibid., pp. 43-44.

30. With help from the orphanage director, the human rights commission, and members of the Catholic Church, parents and children—mostly grown or in their final years of high school—met again after eleven and a half years. One of the children, Andrea, described that meeting:

“When the children arrived in a microbus at the plaza [in Guarjila] there was a big group of people waiting for us. We got out and, in that moment, the shouting and the hugging began. A tall man hugged [two of the orphanage children] Marta and Angelica so impetuously that his hat fell off. They started weeping too. [Another child] Juan Carlos disappeared into a group of women who all hugged him at the same time.

31. “I didn’t see anybody I knew, and nobody came over to me. Maybe my family had not come after all. I started to feel worried when someone told me that my family had come in [to the plaza] from the street. I don’t remember if it was Father Jon [Cortina], the priest of Guarjila, who told me: “Those are your parents.” I walked toward them. My parents came into the middle [of the plaza] and around them were walking so many children, big and small, who had to be my brothers and sisters. When I saw how much one of my little brothers looked like me, I could not contain my tears. We met at the edge of the little plaza and started to hug.⁴⁴

32. News of the meeting—and that disappeared children had been found alive—spread through rural communities like wildfire. A few months later, in August 1994, families and Cortina founded Pro Búsqueda [For Searching]. Within a few years, with the help of DNA testing through groups like Physicians for Human Rights and the hard, slow, sifting and matching of newspaper stories and the archival records of orphanages, Pro Búsqueda began finding lost children—in adoptive families in France, in Spain, in the United States.⁴⁵

33. For the “found” children, as well as their families, integrating their experiences and renewing their relationships was frustratingly difficult. After more than a decade of waiting, worrying, and wondering, it was hard to learn that relationships did not just start over where they had left off; often, there was unresolvable pain about how the disappearances themselves had taken place. In Central America in the eighties, militaries and paramilitaries targeted entire communities, resulting in scenes of murder, mayhem, and anguished flight. As Andrea understood her story, from her parents and her own memory, he disappearances began with event know as the Guinda de Mayo (the flight in May [1982]):

“[When the people got to a place called] Los Alvarenga, they couldn’t get out. There were a ton of people, maybe a thousand, hidden in the vegetation of a tiny hill. It was only a question of time before the soldiers found us. Thus, they said that they were going to try to break through the wall [of the military]. The guerrillas [who were trying to escort the people past the military] started to shoot and the people to run. In order to organize its ambushes, the army had hidden in place where they believed the people would pass. My father had to pass through the middle of the shooting, running with me against his chest and [her sister] Carmen in his arms. My mother ran with [another child] Argelia in her arms and Arturo [the oldest son, ran] with my brother Luis, but with all the people they could not follow my father. The people ran, terrified. The dead fell before them and behind them. The wounded on the ground shouted, “Kill me, please!” because they did not want to continue suffering. In the road, you could see only the dead and wounded and the uproar of the people who fled, while the soldier shot at them. Following an avalanche, my father came to a huge cliff. But the helicopters had arrived. Now they were shooting from the hills and from the air. The people were throwing themselves off the cliff, a fall of many meters. They were falling on top of each other, hitting each other, shouting in pain. At the edge of cliff, around my father, the dead and the wounded were piled up. Others threw themselves without even looking, as if they didn't realize there was a cliff in front of them. My father thought that if he threw himself holding both girls, we would surely all three die. In this moment, he decided to leave me. He lay me down under a tree [she had been seriously wounded days before by a rocket attack on their community, and couldn't stand] at the edge of the bank, gave me a final kiss, and jumped with my sister in his arms...My father was the one who suffered the most from my loss. He spent months crying and lamenting for having left me. He felt very guilty. Personally, I think he made the correct decision. Nevertheless, it is a decision that no one, no human being, ever should be forced to make, a decision of life or death, save one or the other.”⁴⁶

34. On a practical level, reunion did not resolve loss. Parents' and children's lives had developed trajectories that were not overlapping. Andrea, for example, intended to go to college with help from the orphanage. Although she and her parents and siblings took great pleasure from their meetings, and their subsequent connections, none of the children went to live with their parents again. Seeing each other continued to be important, but finding each other did not heal all the wounds; their lives had taken separate paths for more than a decade. In birth families, new children had been born, sometimes a mother or father had died and the surviving partner had remarried. As Pro Búsqueda grew, there was mutual support but also friction and resentment when some families found their children and others did not. All—children, parents of found children, parents of lost children—had been through tremendous upheaval, loss, and trauma. Some had lost children as a result of guerrilla forces, while the majority had lost their children to the army. The strength of pro-Búsqueda, though, was that it simultaneously emphasized political and mental health approaches, and in fact did not see the two as that different from each other. In support groups, participants would try to sort out the political context that gave rise to their own, and others, actions and feelings. Responding to critics who wanted to know why Pro-Búsqueda couldn't just leave the question of lost children alone, so many years after the kidnapping, Jon Cortina spoke in terms of wounds that parents, children, and the society as a whole carried that could not heal until people knew the truth, and justice was done.⁴⁷

35. On March 1, 2005, pro-Búsqueda won a significant legal victory in seeing the military held responsible for the kidnapping of children. The military had long insisted that it had only acted in humanitarian ways, picking up lost children and taking them to the Red Cross; under unusual circumstances, raising war orphans in military barracks and teaching them skills.⁴⁸ In 2005, though, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights issued a decision condemning the Salvadoran government in the case of the Serrano Cruz sisters, Ernestina and Erlinda, who at the ages of 2 and 7 were taken from their family at gunpoint during the military's "Operacion Limpieza" (Operation Clean-Up) in 1982. As they watched, family members said, soldiers took the little girls into a military helicopter, which flew away and disappeared. The girls have never been found, nor have the individuals responsible been identified. Their mother initiated the case, but did not live to see its fruition, but their sister, Suyapa, was able to testify in her stead. The Salvadoran government, for its defense, suggested that the girls never existed—the logical culmination of the process of "disappearance." The court ordered the Salvadoran government to apologize to the family, to make monetary restitution, to open the military archives to searchers, and to develop a state-level organization to find Salvador's lost children.⁴⁹ The government ignored the court order.

36. Most of the leadership of the Guatemalan and Salvadoran militaries in these decades were trained by the U.S. military and intelligence in counterinsurgency.⁵⁰ There is no clear evidence on way or another about whether this was a tactic promoted by the United States, and hence whether it was directly modeled on boarding school policy, or only copied.

37. The children that lived through the Guatemalan and Salvadoran governments' policy of child separation were born in the 1970s and eighties. They are the generation of the parents and grandparents of children currently being separated at the United States border.

Introduction

I am the Society of Black Alumni Presidential Professor and Professor of History at Johns Hopkins University. Prior to joining the Johns Hopkins University faculty, I was the Presidential Bicentennial Professor at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, where I was a member of the faculties in law, history, and African American Studies. I hold a PhD in history from Columbia University and a JD from the City University of New York School of Law. I am an internationally recognized expert in the history of slavery, race, and law in United States History. I am author of All Bound Up Together: The Woman Question in African American Public Culture, 1830-1900 (2007), and Birthright Citizens: A History of Race and Rights in Antebellum America (2018), and a co-editor of Toward an Intellectual History of Black Women (2015), as well as author of numerous articles and essay. I am a member of the executive board of the Organization of American Historians and a President of the Berkshire Conference of Women Historians.

The report was prepared at the request of the Washington State Attorney General's Office. It was produced by way of a review of the scholarly historical literature on the subject of slavery in British North America and the United States, with an emphasis on the antebellum (or pre-Civil War) decades of 1830-1860.

Overview: Slavery in British North America

In the United States, slavery was an institution premised upon the notion of property in persons. Historians have adopted this phrase to express how enslaved people were regarded simultaneously as human beings and as property. Enslaved children, like adults, were viewed as property: investments, collateral, commodities, and bound laborers. They were also recognized as persons, exercising will, acquiring knowledge and skills, and constructing communities and intimate relations. They could be bought and sold on the courthouse steps and also be held culpable for their bad acts in a courtroom. What set this form of coerced labor apart from others, including indentured servitude, was the ever-present possibility of individuals being sold, often termed the chattel principle.¹

Slavery was a fundamental component of North American economic, legal, and political structures from the 17th century forward. The documented presence of Africans pre-dates this period, but it was in the 1600s with European settlement that British colonial officials began to regulate those held as slaves, including their family lives. By a 1662 Act, for example, the colonial legislature of Virginia determined that the status of an enslaved woman's children would follow her condition, thus also becoming slaves: "Children got by an Englishman upon a Negro woman shall be bond or free according to the condition of the mother...." This principle – partus sequitur ventrem – would come to govern throughout the British North American colonies and later the United States. This was a departure from English common law, which deemed that children followed the status of their fathers.²

The regulation of slavery was not limited to any one region in North America, and extended up and down the Atlantic seaboard, from what today we would term north to south. In 1690, people of African descent comprised less than 15% of the populations of Virginia and Maryland. That changed between 1690 and 1710, when the numbers of enslaved people being imported into those states doubled. By 1770, people of African descent comprised 40 percent of the population in Georgia. In the mid-18th century North, slaves were just over 9 percent of Rhode Island's population, 7.5 percent in New Jersey, and over 12 percent of the overall population in New York. In the wake of the American Revolution, most northern states would set in place gradual abolition schemes. Still, enslaved people continued to be held in that region up until the Civil War in New Jersey.³ At the time of the first federal census in 1790, the number of enslaved people in the US totaled 29,264, or just over 35 percent of the overall population, with the largest numbers of slaves held in Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina.⁴

Parent-child relations among enslaved people were not merely regulated, they were at risk. By the mid-17th century, the separation of children from parents was commonplace in the New England colonies. In Wethersfield, Connecticut, for example, youngsters were “given away or sold in order to enhance an owner’s wealth, settle debts, or simply in exchange for a more desirable commodity.”⁵ Courts frequently encountered questions about how to regard enslaved families in the context of estate proceedings, both testate and intestate. Practice varied as courts worked through questions about whether slaves were real or personal property. But overall, interpretations strongly favored the right of inheritance, such that enslaved families were frequently separated, or “portioned,” without restriction.⁶ It was possible even to bequeath an Slavery in the Antebellum United States.

This report principally concerns the experiences of enslaved families – including the separation of parents and children -- in the era after the American Revolution, with an emphasis on the three decades preceding the American Civil War (also known as the antebellum or prewar era.) This period also followed Congress's 1808 ban on the international slave trade, which barred the importation of enslaved people from beyond the nation's' borders into the US. In this period, slavery generated prosperity owing to the market success of slave-produced staple crops, including cotton and sugar. Simultaneously, slavery was subject to a sustained challenge, with the emergence of an abolitionist movement that called for slavery's immediate end.

The pressures on enslaved families and also on single enslaved women to reproduce a workforce grew in this period. The close of the international trade meant that future enslaved workers would no longer be imported from Africa or the Caribbean, and instead they would be drawn from a so-called natural increase in the domestic slave population. The reproductive labor of enslaved women, whose children were deemed to follow their mother's status, was now the sole source of future bound laborers. The value of such children as workers increased as access to imported slaves was closed. At the same time, a new sort of slave trade emerged, a domestic one — buying and selling enslaved people strictly within the US — that forced the relocation of what are estimated to have been between one to two million slaves. This trade relocated enslaved people from upper South states such as Maryland and Virginia, where soil had been depleted and the economy had shifted to a reliance upon wage laborers, to cotton, rice and sugar producing regions further south. The related sales further disrupted the bonds of enslaved families.⁸

In antebellum America, between 1820 and 1860, two out of every five slaves were younger than fifteen and one-third was younger than ten.⁹ The lives of enslaved children were especially precarious. Rates of “mortality, morbidity, and injury” were high, with sickness and death being commonplace. Slaveholders generally neglected the health of enslaved children, even at the risk of losing valuable property. The capacities of enslaved parents to care for their children were limited by the demands of work and the scarcity of resources. Slaveholders came between parents and children in everyday ways, assigning work responsibilities and meting out punishments. Still, the day-to-day rearing of children was generally left to enslaved parents and their communities. Historians do not agree about the degree to which such parents could ensure

⁹ Historian Wilma King makes the point that age is only one criterion by which to determine who is a child. As her the title of her 1997 book suggests, enslaved young people had much of the childhoods “stolen,” by the demands placed upon them by slaveholders. the well being of children. We do know that adults negotiated with slaveholders, trading their labor and general deference for an owner's special consideration for children and the granting of parental autonomy over the care and raising of children. This was a delicate bargain enacted between unequal parties, with slave owners holding the balance of power and enslaved parents having no legally enforceable rights. These were frequently negotiations conducted in the context of the ultimate threat: the separation of children from their parents.¹⁰

Slavery and Law.

Slavery was an institution rooted in and dependent upon law. From constitutions and statutes to high courts and clerks' offices, slavery was built upon the premise of property in persons. This was no metaphor. Slaveholders and those who traded in or otherwise profited from the institution depended upon law to formalize their interests, resolve their disputes, and generally ensure that owners could premise their economic lives upon the future control of bound labor.

The US Constitution of 1787 was a proslavery document. Of course, slavery pre-dated its ratification. Still, as the framers crafted a new governing text for the nation, they also ensured that slavery would be part of that founding fabric. The Constitution shielded the international slave trade from Congressional interference. (Article 1, section 9.) Slavery determined to an important degree how representation in Congress and taxes would be determined, by way of the 3/5ths clause which granted slave holding states enhanced representation in Congress based upon unfree persons who did not themselves exercise political rights. (Article 1, section 2.) The fugitive slave clause authorized Congress to aid slaveholders who sought to recover fugitive slaves by way of a “militia” that would “suppress insurrections,” a provision that had putting down slave uprisings in mind. (Article 4, section 2.) A casual reading of the 1787 Constitution might miss its pro-slavery character. This is because the framers employed coded language – referring to slaves as, for example, “all other persons”—to shield the document from direct criticism. Still, reading of the slim notes from the constitutional convention itself and the robust ratification debates that followed, make plain that the framers knew they were helping to guarantee slavery’s future.¹¹

The US Supreme Court did not play a major role in the furtherance and protection of slavery. As discussed below, largely state law governed the institution. Important exceptions are worth noting, however, the most notorious being the decision in Dred Scott v. Sandford.¹² Asked to review a lower court decision that had deemed Scott a slave, the high court reached beyond that issue to deny the authority of federal courts to hear freedom suits brought by enslaved people altogether. Scott was as a black person, the decision opined, was not a citizen of the United States. He was thus without standing to bring suit in federal court under diversity jurisdiction. The court went on to conclude that no person of African descent, enslaved or free, could be a citizen of the United States. As for slavery more broadly, the court deemed the Missouri Compromise of 1820, which had emanated from Congress's assumed authority to regulate slavery in US territories, unconstitutional thus invalidating Congress's power to govern slavery there. Subsequent opposition to Dred Scott compromised the court's reputation and its decision was in essence superseded by the 13th and 14th Amendments, in 1865 and 1868 respectively.

Slavery was however, in the parlance of the period, a domestic institution, meaning that state legislatures and courts largely regulated slavery. As discussed above, individual colonies had early on governed slavery by positive law. This continued into the antebellum period as individual states regulated the institution. There were those that abolished slavery in the North. In the southern slaveholding states, state law governed slavery by way of public law, including criminal codes that provided a unique set of charges and sanctions for enslaved offenders. Private law too was extensively involved in regulating slavery, especially in the areas of contact and trusts and estate. Few states governed by way of comprehensive codes, with Louisiana being the exception. State legislatures and high courts were busy throughout the antebellum period setting forth statutes and common law principles that managed nearly all aspects of slavery. While only a small subset of enslaved people would ever be party to or the subject of court proceedings, slaveholders relied upon the ever-available terms of state law, court, judges, and clerks to organize and exert their power over bonds people.¹³

The separation of enslaved parent from their children was facilitated by the very same state laws, and enforced by courts through otherwise ordinary proceedings. This was a widespread practice, though precisely how far it is difficult to quantify. As important as the fact of separation was, separation of families was also an ever-present threat. Slavery was not an institution governed merely by the lash. Law was an essential instrument for slaveholders who looked to maximize the profits of property in persons. But much of slavery's day-to-day regulation was informal, characterized by a persistent struggle between slaveholders and those hold in bondage.

Among the tools of coercion employed by slaveholders, as they sought to render enslaved people compliant, was the threat of separating families. Historians of slavery emphasize that no threat — not the lash, or degraded working conditions, or the curtailment of modest privileges — was more potent and more feared than the threat that reluctant, resistant, or otherwise non-compliant slaves would be sold. Instilling the fear of separation might be used as a weapon. But even in slaveholding households where no such explicit threats were leveled, enslaved people knew that an owner's death, bankruptcy, or other change of circumstances could result in the redistribution of property in persons and hence separate enslaved parents from children.¹⁴

Enslaved people wrote with great feeling about the experience of being separated from their families. Enslaved poet Phillis Wheatley survived the middle passage as a captive, in a journey that took her from West African to Boston, Massachusetts. The year was 1761 and Wheatley was just seven or eight years of age. Wheatley went on, under the tutelage of her owner, to publish her poetry to critical acclaim. In her writings, Wheatley expressed her longings for Africa and her parents whom she would never see again. Frederick Douglass is among the best remembered of the antebellum period's fugitive slaves, going on to a career as an anti-slavery activist, journalist, orator, and statesman. Douglass published his first memoir in 1845, explaining his life as an enslaved boy. In the opening chapter, he recounted how forced separations blunted his feelings: "I never saw my mother, to know her as such, more than four or five times in my life; and each of these times was very short in duration, and at night. ... She died when I was about seven years old, on one of my master's farms. ... Never having enjoyed, to any considerable extent, her soothing presence, her tender and watchful care, I received the tidings of her death with much the same emotions I should have probably felt at the death of a stranger.”¹⁵

Sojourner Truth, the anti slavery and women’s rights orator, recounted how she was forcibly separated from her son during her time as a slave in upstate New York. It was a story of how slaveholders traded young enslaved people within white families, without regard for the bonds among slaves themselves. Truth’s “old master … had sold her child, a boy of five years, to a Dr. Gedney, who took him with him as far as New York city, on his way to England; but finding the boy too small for his service, he sent him back to his brother, Solomon Gedney. This man disposed of him to his sister's husband, a wealthy planter, by the name of Fowler, who took him to his own home in Alabama. This illegal and fraudulent transaction had been perpetrated some months before [Truth] knew of it.”¹⁶

The story of Matthew Matthews suggests that while some white Americans might act as allies to enslaved people, slaveholder’s property interests were nearly always paramount. Originally from Virginia, Matthews purchased his own freedom with the intent of also purchasing his children in 1835. He was only partially successful, gaining legal custody of one child while being faced with the threat that the owner of his remaining children, who faced hard financial times, might be forced to sell his children at public auction and beyond their father's reach. Matthew's letters suggest that he was dogged, ingenious, and had the capacity to enlist the support of other African Americans, who loaned him money, and influential whites who interceded on his behalf.¹⁷

The dislocations of the Civil War only continued the problem of children being separated from parents. They also gave enslaved people unprecedented opportunity to challenge and even rectify the separation of parent from child. Rose Herera's owners sought to avoid the incursion of Union troops into the slaveholding city of New Orleans, Louisiana in 1862. They fled to Cuba, taking with them three of Herera's four children – aged two, four and six. It appeared that Herera and her husband, a free man of color, had no recourse because the children were property, following the status of their mother. But Herera neither forgot her children nor her desire to be reunited with them. After the war's end, three years later in 1865, Herera appeared before a local magistrate to complain that her children had been kidnapped. What followed were months of legal wrangling that resulted in a hard-won reunion. Still, Herera, her husband, and their children endured years of separation and uncertainty in the interim.¹⁸

The Antislavery Critique of Separating Families

The abolitionist movement documented the separation of children from parents, and made this a cornerstone in their case for the end of slavery. Families were central, sacred, and the bedrock of American society, they argued. Slavery's violence, injustice, and contradictions were revealed nowhere more plainly than in those many instances in which families were broken up. The movement relied to an important degree upon what was termed "moral suasion." Among abolitionists were those who believe that only by transforming the hearts and minds of white Americans to the anti slavery cause, would the institution end. They utilized the podium, newspaper and pamphlets – the media of the day – with great effectiveness. Eventually experienced teams of speakers — black and white — were touring the US and Great Britain seeking new subscribers to the movement. Their training included pamphlet such as La Roy Sunderland 1837 Antislavery Manual.¹⁹

Sunderland armed anti slavery advocates with two points of view on the separation of children from parents. The first was comparative. "Unlike American slavery," what he termed "Jewish Servitude" had be a more benign institution that respected domestic relations such that parents and children could not be separated and when a woman was freed, her children remained with her. His second point came in the form a story, borrowed from the narrative of a former slave, Charles Ball. Ball had describe in poignant detail the day he was separated from his mother: "My poor mother, when she saw me leaving her for the last time, ran after me, took me down from the horse, clasped me in her arms, and wept loudly and bitterly over me. ... The slave-driver who had first bought her, came running in pursuit of her with a raw hide in his hand. When he overtook us, he told her was her master now, and ordered her to give that little negro to its owner, and come back to him.” My mother then turned to him and cried “Oh, master, do not take me from my child!” “I never again heard the voice of my poor mother,” Ball wrote. Ball’s story went on to suggest how such scenes might be repeated in one individual’s lifetime. He went on to make his own family, only to be sold away from his wife and children.”²⁰

No one piece of anti slavery literature had more influence than did Harriet Beecher Stowe’s novel Uncle Tom’s Cabin. It was widely read in its own time, credited by Abraham Lincoln with having helped start the Civil War, and was retold in newspaper installments, books, and also stage productions. Stowe convincingly taught thousands upon thousands of Americans about the evils of slavery, and first among those evil was the separation of children from parents: Uncle Tom’s Cabin is an ambitious novel with many characters and plot-lines, but at its heart are stories of three enslaved people whose lives were defined by family separations. Eliza and George Harris learn that their son Harry is going to be sold away from them and run away. The title character Tom Shelby is sold away from his wife and children, and spends the rest of the novel trying to find his way back to them. Uncle Tom’s Cabin rested upon artful fiction, but its success was attributable to how true Stowe’s story was in the lives of many unnamed enslaved people. Northern sentiment arrived at a consensus that condemned the separation of children from parents as among slavery’s most abhorrent practices.²¹

Critique Emerges in Proslavery Circles

The testimony of former slaves along with Stowe's powerful narrative appear to have led southern lawmakers to develop their own critique of separating children from parents. By the 1850s, individual states were revising their laws to place gentle but real curbs upon such practices by slaveholders. There was of course a self-serving dimension to such reforms. Proslavery lawmakers hoped to deflect broader criticisms by implementing modest changes. At the same time, the decision to put in place reforms on precisely the question of family integrity was linked to how widespread and compelling a critique there was.

There emerged a modest willingness to permit abolitionist criticism to enter law and policy. In Georgia, for example, a new 1854 statute prohibited executors and administrators from selling children under the age of five; they were to be placed together with their mothers. But there was a caveat: "Unless such division cannot in any wise be affected without such separation." The right of inheritance outweighed even this effort to limit the horrors that slaves lived with because of an inheritance.²² The Maryland Supreme Court in Homes v. Mitchell introduced the view that there were limits to how enslaved children could be disposed of, and they were moral limits:

Robbins, The Annotated Uncle Tom's Cabin by Harriet Beecher Stowe (New York: W. W. Norton, 2007.)

“The infant cannot be torn from its mother and sold or transferred to the complainant. No one would buy, and humanity would cry out against it.²³

The Alabama code of 1852 critiqued separating young children from parents in a provision that barred removing enslaved children under ten from their mothers.²⁴ The state’s Governor explained the underlying reasoning, and while he was in no sense an abolitionist, his ideas were consistent with the critique that both enslaved people and anti slavery activists had long leveled. The new law left slaveholders an out if keeping families together was impractical and the Governor urged a stricter law: “The Code very properly provides that slave children of tender years shall, at judicial and some other sales, be offered with their mothers.... These provisions, in my judgment, should be absolute, at least as it respects mothers, and children of ten years of age and under, and husband and wife, where the latter relation is admitted by the owner of the slaves. These relations which moral duty requires us to respect, and it can be no violation of policy to confirm municipal law to good morals. It is universally conceded that slaves are reasonable beings – with the moral feelings, it is true, often obtuse, but susceptible of improvement. The husband and wife generally cherish affection for each other, and the mutual attachment of mother and child is usually strong. The mother is not always wise counselor, but she must be presumed to be the most constant and sincere the child has. Let, then, the latter enjoy this parental oversight during childhood, that it may be the better prepared by good principles and industrious habits act its part afterwards.” Proslavery thought in some cases adapted to the view that separating young children from parents went too far, even in a system that openly sanctioned the holding of persons as property.”²⁵

Criticism of how slavery separated families was reflected in Congress’s debates as it contemplated the abolition of slavery. Republican Senator James Harlan of Iowa spoke in support of the 13th Amendment, explaining that the failure to abolish slavery would leave in place unnecessary evils. First, Harlan decried how slavery had abrogated the “conjugal relations of enslaved people.” He then went on to make plain how slavery had tragically severed the relations between family and child: “Another incident is the abolition practically of the parental relation, robbing the offspring of the care and attention of his parents, severing a relation which is universally cited as the emblem of the relation sustained by the creator to the human family. And yet, according to the matured judgment of these slave States, this guardianship of the parent over his own children must be abrogated to secure the perpetuity of slavery.”²⁶

Legacies

The legacy of separating families during slavery extended well into the 20th century. Enslaved people themselves left poignant records that reveal the immediate cost and the long term consequences of separating children from parents under slavery. Their stories, many of them told years after slavery was abolished, are a testament to how vital family was to enslaved people and about how their experience of loss was not ever set aside or forgotten.

First hand accounts of former slaves, were collected by the Federal Writer's Project of the Works Progress Administration in the 1930s. The "WPA narratives," as they are commonly termed, were produced by anthropologists, folklorists, and historians traveling the country to record the life stories of former slaves. This set of 2000 interviews conducted across 17 states, paints a vivid picture of life for children under slavery. Very elderly when the interviews were taken, the men and women studied had been young people in the years just prior to emancipation. They invariably tell stories of losing family members to sale, trade, and the vagaries of the market in persons. We learn that even many decades later, late in life, former slaves recalled and mourned the irretrievable loss of family members. These losses were still being felt well into the 20th century.²⁷

No evidence is more arresting than that of the advertisements that former slaves placed in newspapers following emancipation. There, in columns with titles such as "Information Wanted," freed people searched across time and space hoping to be reunited with loved ones from whom they had been separated

"The Atlanta Constitution. August 19, 1917. Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie Dillard, of Lynchburg, Va., wish to find their nine children, Mollie, Daniel, John, Tommy, Malinda, Jimmie, Mauncy and

Margaret Jane (all colored), who when last heard of were sold by negro traders. Write information to Mamie Stuart, rear of 355 Walnut Street, Atlanta, Ga. Will pay all expenses.”

These ads continued to be published into the early 20th century, a half century after slavery had been abolished. Mothers searched for sons, fathers for daughters, children for parent and for siblings. Husband searched for wives. Slavery may have most often been indifferent to the kinship bonds of slaves, and slavery certainly ensured that those bonds would be strained. Still, the thousands of ads placed by former slaves in search of loved ones make plain that in many cases such bonds were not broken.²⁸

Conclusion

The separation of enslaved children from their parents was a regular and even commonplace dimension of slavery in the United States. By sale or gift, estate division or to satisfy a debt, enslaved families lived under the ever-present threat they would be separated. Fugitive slaves testified to the experience of being separated from loved ones, and abolitionists held the destruction of the enslaved family up as one of the institution’s most egregious practices. By the 1850s, even pro-slavery lawmakers recognized that separating young children from mothers was contrary to both morality and policy, and put modest curbs against the practice in place. With slavery’s abolition in 1865, a new era opened up, a half-century during which family members separated by slavery searched for one another. The legacy of separating enslaved families was thus felt into the 20st century

NO.

DECLARATION OF LANE
LECKMAN, M.D., IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS'
MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY
INJUNCTION

I, Lane Leckman, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.

2. I am an M.D., distinguished fellow of the American Psychiatric Association and past president of the New Mexico Psychiatric Association.

3. In that capacity, I observed threats to public health from housing immigrants together in 2014 at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC) in Artesia, New Mexico.

4. That experience has led me to understand that housing immigrant families who originate in many different countries with many different standards for inoculation protocols exposes incarcerated residents and staff to disease and disability.

1 5. The potential crises for public health from the FLETC barracks housing
2 contributed to the case for closure of the facility.

3 6. Even though mothers and their babies were not separated in the FLETC facility 4 in 2014 and instead were housed together with other immigrant families, their lives were 5 endangered because of institutionalization without adequate inoculation to prevent the spread 6 of communicable diseases.

7 7. In addition to the health traumas from the spread of infectious diseases, the 8 population at the FLETC facility suffered psychological and emotional damage from the 9 trauma of incarceration and their uncertain physical circumstances.

10 8. It is well-known that psychological trauma feeds stress and emotional 11 breakdowns as clearly as lack of inoculation feeds infectious physical diseases.

12 9. There is no reason to expect that facilities constructed at the four military bases 13 under President Trump's executive order reversing the family separation policy will be able to 14 prevent the common physical, emotional and psychological problems triggered by the housing 15 of immigrants in barracks in 2014.

16 10. I am concerned that the current administration's policies will be implemented 17 without time or planning to ensure that adequate preventive health care are in place prior to 18 moving families into close quarters where infectious diseases thrive.

19 11. For this reason, I declare my opposition to the announced plans to house 20 immigrant families together pending adjudication in military or other facilities.

21 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of Washington and the
22 United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

DECLARATION OF SHADI HOUSHYAR IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR EXPEDITED
DISCOVERY

Defendants.

I, Shadi Houshyar, declare as follows:

I am over the age of 18 and make this declaration based upon my personal experience and my expertise.

1. I recently joined Families USA as Director of Early Childhood and Child Welfare Initiatives. I have over a dozen years of experience working in the nonprofit sector on federal and state child welfare and early childhood policies with a primary focus on childhood trauma, toxic stress, and adverse childhood experiences (ACEs). Before coming to Families USA, I worked at the Washington, D.C.-based Center for the Study of Social Policy (CSSP), an organization that promotes policy solutions and provides technical assistance that allows policymakers and community-based organizations to improve outcomes for vulnerable children and families. At CSSP, I led a project focused on preventing and mitigating the effects of toxic stress on young children and their families while building and sustaining partnerships

1 with national leaders in the early childhood arena. Previously, I spent nearly a decade as Vice
 2 President of Child Welfare Policy at First Focus, where I led federal child welfare policy 3 efforts, including advocacy on child abuse and neglect prevention, foster care, and health and 4 behavioral health policies affecting children and their families. I also was founding director of 5 First Focus's State Policy and Advocacy Reform Center, a national resource center for state-6 based advocates aimed at improving outcomes for children and families involved with the 7 child welfare system by building the capacity of and connections between state child welfare
 8 advocates. I received my Ph.D., M.Phil., and M.S. degrees in Developmental Psychology from 9 Yale University and my Bachelor of Science degree in Psychology from Kalamazoo College.

10 2. Founded in 1981, Families USA Foundation is a nonprofit, nonpartisan, 501(c)(3) 11 organization that is dedicated to the achievement of high-quality, comprehensive, and 12 affordable health care for all Americans. We advance our mission through public policy
 13 analysis, advocacy, and collaboration with partners to promote a patient- and community-
 14 centered health system. We work closely with more than 8,000 consumer leaders and more 15 than 16,000 grassroots activists in all 50 states. We work closely with other national health
 16 care patient and consumer organizations on Medicaid and private insurance coverage, 17 community health, and health equity issues. As part of our work, we talk directly with 18 thousands of individual consumers about their experiences with the health care system. We 19 help connect these individuals with opportunities to share their experiences publicly and help 20 to seek improvements in health care.

21 3. Families USA is committed to the belief that separating children from their parents is 22 harmful to children, traumatic for families, and runs counter to our basic American values.

23 4. The process of separation is itself traumatic. Children forcibly separated from their 24 parents are placed in a Customs and Border Protection (CBP) facility before being transferred 25 to the care of the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) within the U.S. Department of Health 26 and Human Services.

1 5. I am aware of reports of unsafe and poor conditions at CBP facilities, including concrete 2 floors, fenced enclosures, brutally cold temperatures in holding cells and sheets of foil used as
 3 blankets. I am also aware that CBP's policy is to hold children in its custody for less than 72
 4 hours, but that nearly 300 children in a recent study—half under the age of 12—spent more 5 than 72 hours.

6 6. Once transferred to ORR, children await placement with a parent, relative, or family
 7 friend. I am aware that ORR has reported that children spend an average of 56 days in its 8 shelters. ORR is not a child welfare agency and does not have the necessary experience to care 9 for the thousands of children, and now, a growing number of young children, it houses in a 10 network of 100 facilities in 14 states. I am aware of reports stating that ORR shelters are 11 operating at 95% capacity, housing as many as 11,200 children, and that babies and the 12 youngest children are being sent to separate “tender age” shelters that are not equipped to 13 adequately care for their needs. These shelters represent a return to the long-discredited 14 practice of forcibly institutionalizing the very young with devastating consequences for their 15 short and long-term health and wellbeing.

16 7. Research into early childhood adversity has shown that trauma suffered while young 17 (adverse childhood experiences or ACEs) can have serious and lasting consequences for later
 18 health outcomes. Robust connections have been shown between ACEs and increased morbidity
 19 and mortality as an adult.¹ ACEs in early childhood have been linked to poor physical health 20 outcomes² and below-average language and math skills and behavior problems in 21 kindergarten.³ Children who have suffered ACEs are also more likely to suffer from mental

1 health problems, chronic medical conditions, and poor social development.⁴ These traumas
 2 have been shown to have intergenerational effects, harming the children of those who suffered
 3 ACEs.⁵

4 8. Frequent exposures to strong, frequent, and/or prolonged adversity without adequate 5 adult support can cause “toxic stress” that leads to physiological effects on a child’s 6 neuroendocrine and immune systems, stress regulatory system, and brain development.
 7 Children suffering from separation from a parent may show signs similar to those of post-
 8 traumatic stress disorder, including loss of appetite, trouble sleeping, and regressive behaviors.

9 9. Research also indicates that children are resilient, and can overcome adverse experiences
 10 with adequate adult support and a nurturing family environment. The absence of this stable
 11 environment can have lasting consequences for the brain’s recovery. Family separations result 12 in a double trauma where the initial forced separation is coupled with the ongoing absence of 13 the child’s primary resource of support or buffer for coping with the separation.

14 10. Federal and state child welfare policy conform to the finding that children do best in 15 family environments, and that separation of a child from his or her parents should be done only 16 in extreme cases, not as a standing matter of policy. Early childhood separation in a chaotic 17 and unfamiliar environment can cause significant distress and is traumatic for children.

18 11. Reports of poor conditions at family detention facilities are common with visitors
 19 describing prison-like conditions with cement floors for sleeping; open toilets; lights on 24
 20 hours a day; inadequate food and water; and limited medical, dental, and mental health
 21 services. Reports by pediatric and mental health advocates following visits to family detention
 22 centers in 2015 and 2016 revealed discrepancies between ICE standards and the actual services

1 provided to families, including reports of inadequate or inappropriate immunizations, delayed
 2 access to medical care, inadequate education services, and limited mental health services.⁶

3 12. The prison-like conditions in detention, including constant surveillance can be 4 confusing and intimidating for children. Children may feel unsafe in detention which could be 5 a trigger and re-traumatizing for children who have experienced past trauma.

6 13. The stress of detention can harm a child's developing brain and is associated with 7 psychological distress and short-term symptoms including eating difficulties and somatic
 8 complaints, sleep problems, depression and anxiety, and long-term health consequences
 9 including developmental delays, post-traumatic stress disorder, anxiety, depression, suicidal
 10 ideation and other behavioral problems.^{7 8 9} Children can experience significant distress and 11 toxic stress in detention conditions.

12 14. Research indicates that a child's wellbeing is closely linked to his or her parent's 13 stability and that a parent's ability to act as a buffer from toxic stress greatly affects early 14 development.¹⁰ Detention, even for brief periods of time, can also have adverse consequences
 15 for the health and wellbeing of parents.¹¹ Detention can exacerbate existing mental health 16 conditions for parents and compromise a parent's ability – under stress – to respond to the 2 periods in detention further compromise the capacity of parents to care for their children.

3 15. Based on my professional experience and background, available research and 4 testimonials of both families and experts, I can say with certainty that both detention and 5 family separation - even for short periods of time - are distressing, traumatic and damaging to 6 the health and wellbeing of children and parents.

15 DECLARATION OF MARYLEE
16 SHEPPARD IN SUPPORT OF
17 PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR
18 EXPEDITED DISCOVERY

19 I, Marylee Sheppard, declare as follows:

20 1. I am a resident of the State of California. I am over the age of 18 and have personal 21 knowledge of all the facts stated herein. If called as a witness, I could and would testify 22 competently to the matters set forth below.

23 2. I obtained a Masters of Social Work in 2006 from California State University, 24 Sacramento and have been a Licensed Clinical Social Worker since 2013.

25 3. I am currently employed by the California Department of Social Services 26 (CDSS) and have been for 11 years. I currently serve as the Chief of the Child Protection and Family Support Branch (CPFSB), one of five branches within the Children and Family Services Division of the California Department of Social Services. Before assuming my current position, I served as the Bureau Chief for the Resource Development and Training Support Bureau within the CPFSB. Prior to joining the CDSS, I was a child welfare social

1 worker in a few counties in California providing wraparound family services and family
2 reunification services.

3 4. CDSS is one of sixteen departments and offices within the California Health
4 and Human Services Agency and is responsible for the oversight and administration of 5 programs serving California's most vulnerable residents. Our mission is to serve, aid, and 6 protect needy and vulnerable children and adults in ways that strengthen and preserve families,
7 encourage personal responsibility, and foster independence. CDSS employs at least 4,200
8 individuals in 41 offices throughout California.

9 5. The CPFSB is responsible for pre-placement and in-home services policy 10 components within child welfare services, including child abuse prevention, as well as 11 statewide training and staff development activities of public child welfare service workers. In 12 addition, a wide range of community-based services, including child abuse prevention, and 13 intervention and treatment services that are designed to increase family strengths and capacity 14 to provide children with a stable and supportive family environment, are administered in the 15 Branch.

16 6. My duties as the Branch Chief of CPFSB include supervising the professional 17 staff engaged in child abuse prevention programs, and setting policy direction, planning and 18 goals for the Branch to ensure effective, efficient and equitable management and delivery of 19 child abuse prevention services. I am also responsible for oversight and development of 20 California policies related to the integration of child welfare services and mental health, 21 including the provision of mental health services to screen for and treat trauma in children
22 involved in the child welfare system. Additionally, my Branch is working with Rady 23 Children's Hospital to build a trauma informed system of care in California. As a result, my 24 duties require understanding the effects of trauma children experience due to adverse 25 childhood experiences.

1 7. The separation of children from their families causes trauma to children. In the 2 child welfare context, trauma can be inflicted even when the removal from the parent is 3 necessary for the child's safety. Children rely on a parent to care for them and provide for 4 their needs, and when the parent unexpectedly is no longer available to provide for these needs,
5 the child can experience trauma. Studies examining trauma have shown that trauma can cause
6 a change in attachment, bonding, emotional regulation, and brain development. A child of any 7 age who has been suddenly or unexpectedly separated from his or her parent can suffer from 8 severe psychological and emotional trauma, which may require extensive treatment to 9 ameliorate. In very young children under the age of five, the effect of trauma is compounded 10 by the fact that they lack the developmental resources to understand and cope with the loss.

11 8. The effects of trauma can be heightened when treatment and supports are not 12 offered as soon as possible. Research has demonstrated that untreated trauma can result in 13 long-term physical, emotional, psychological, and social problems. Research also shows that,
14 without intensive and individualized services, children who experience untreated trauma may 15 experience academic problems, severe mental health impairment, exploitation, substance use 16 and additional disabling or dangerous situations that could lead to a need for hospitalization or 17 incarceration, either in the present or also in the future.

18 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California and the United 19 States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

16 DECLARATION OF MAYRA E.
17 ALVAREZ IN SUPPORT OF
18 PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR
19 EXPEDITED DISCOVERY

20 I, Mayra E. Alvarez, declare as follows:

21 1. I am over the age of 18 and make this declaration based upon my expertise and 22 personal experiences.

23 2. I am the President of The Children's Partnership (TCP), a nonprofit children's 24 advocacy organization committed to giving every all children, no matter their background, the 25 resources and opportunities they need. The work of TCP is dedicated to improving the lives of 26 underserved children where they live, learn, and play with breakthrough solutions at the intersection of research, policy, and community engagement. For nearly 25 years, we have worked to champion policies and offer resources to provide all children with the opportunities they need to thrive. TCP is a leading voice for children and a critical resource for communities across California and the nation. We aim to close the opportunity gap confronting too many children, especially children of color and those living in poverty, by improving health coverage

1 and care and expanding technology tools and opportunities. Our unique approach includes 2 engaging communities, collaborating with strategic partners, leading with innovative expertise,
 3 and working on research-driven policies.

4 3. I have a decade of experience in public health and health care policy and 5 community relations. Before coming to TCP, I held several assignments at the U.S.
 6 Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). I served as Director of the State Exchange
 7 Group for the Center for Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight at the Centers for 8 Medicare and Medicaid Services at the HHS. Prior to this, I served as the Associate Director
 9 for the HHS Office of Minority Health (OMH), where I led the coordination of OMH's work
 10 related to the Affordable Care Act, community health workers, and language access, and also 11 served as the Project Director of OMH's Center for Linguistic and Cultural Competency in 12 Health Care. Previously, I served as Director of Public Health Policy in the Office of Health
 13 Reform at HHS where I had primary oversight responsibility for coordinated and timely 14 implementation of the public health, prevention, and health care workforce policy provisions in 15 the Affordable Care Act. I have served as a bilingual spokesperson on the Affordable Care Act 16 and other health issues for national and regional broadcast, print and online media,
 17 including New York Times, Washington Post, Wall Street Journal, Women's Health, 18 Cosmopolitan, Glamour, National Public Radio, Univision, Telemundo, CNN en Español, and 19 various state and local outlets. I received my graduate degree from the School of Public Health 20 at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and my undergraduate degree from the 21 University of California at Berkeley. New harsh immigration policies and anti-immigrant 22 rhetoric have instilled a deep and growing fear inside many communities, threatening the 23 health, security, and well-being of children in immigrant families. Research suggests that 24 immigration enforcement activities—or the threats associated with immigration enforcement—

1 negatively impact family processes, developmental trajectories, and the social and emotional
 2 development of children.¹

3 4. Eighteen million children in the U.S.—about a quarter of all children—are part 4 of an immigrant family. Approximately 88 percent of these children were born in the US while
 5 the other 12 percent were born in a different country.² In California, half of all children—4.5
 6 million—are part of an immigrant family. Approximately 92 percent of these children were 7 born in the US while the other 8 percent were born in a different country.³ The current anti-
 8 immigrant climate and related policy changes have far-reaching negative impacts, impacting 9 citizens and noncitizen children alike, many living in fear as to what may happen if their parent 10 is deported or detained.

11 5. Most recently, the troubling “zero tolerance” policy, which imposes criminal 12 penalties meant to deter immigrant families from coming to our country seeking asylum, 13 provides another example of the federal administration’s attack on children. Thousands of 14 children, some as young as a few months old, have been separated from their parents at the 15 border because of this new policy. The zero tolerance policy, announced in April by U.S.
 16 Attorney General Jeff Sessions, calls for the Department of Homeland Security to separate any 17 child crossing the U.S.-Mexico border between ports of entry from the adults with them before 18 those adults are prosecuted. Once separated from their parent, the conditions at the 19 immigration detention centers are nothing a child should experience.

1 6. Separating children from their family increases symptoms of depression, 2 anxiety, and withdrawal resulting in psychological distress, academic difficulties, and 3 disruptions in their development.⁴ In the short term, there are changes to bodily functions.
 4 Research overwhelmingly suggests that the biological effects of stress negatively affects a 5 child's ability to concentrate, remember things, and control and focus their own thinking.⁵ In 6 the long term, such trauma and high levels of stress places children at risk of heart disease,
 7 diabetes, and cardiovascular disease.⁶

8 7. Experts have expressed children that are separated from their families and 9 placed in detention facilities may experience "toxic stress," which is defined as a prolonged 10 exposure to highly stressful situations.⁷ Toxic stress can disrupt a child's brain architecture and 11 inhibit the development of children's brains overall.⁸ It can also keep them from developing 12 language and social, emotional bonds, and gross motor skills, and the development that they 13 could possibly have.⁹

14 8. For the children directly impacted by the separations and the millions of 15 children in immigrant families across the country, the damage is done. TCP conducted a survey 16 of health providers in California and found that nearly 90 percent of providers reported an 17 increase of children in immigrant families experiencing anxiety and fear, which are symptoms

1 of trauma, related to their heightened awareness of the possibility of detention and 2 deportation.¹⁰ Over 70 percent reported an increase in children experiencing symptoms of 3 depression, such as feelings of sadness, sleeping problems, loss or gain of appetite, loss of 4 interest in activities they used to enjoy, and almost half stated that children in immigrant 5 families are increasingly being diagnosed with mental health conditions such as anxiety and 6 depression.

7 9. Executive Order 13841, “Affording Congress an Opportunity to Address Family
 8 Separation,” signed June 20, 2018 by President Trump, does not resolve this crisis. First, it
 9 does nothing to address the trauma experienced by more than 2,000 children already separated
 10 from their parents. Second, it implies that imprisoning whole families is an acceptable path 11 forward when we know family detention has repeatedly been found to be unsuitable for 12 children.¹¹ The inhumane conditions that these children face while in detention centers—13 caged, as well as physically and emotionally neglected—are devoid of compassion and 14 decency. This policy simply trades one source of childhood trauma for another.

15 10. Detention negatively impacts the health of parents and children. As the Kaiser
 16 Family Foundation noted in a recent publication on family separation, “global studies show 17 significant effects for children held in detention, including depression, post-traumatic stress, 18 suicidal thoughts and behaviors, developmental delays, and behavioral issues.”¹² Rather than jailing families who are in deportation proceedings, the government should employ alternatives to detention proven to be more effective while also limiting the long-term trauma to children and their families. The Kaiser Family Foundation report also found that detaining families and children is costlier than utilizing alternative programs, such as community-based supervision and monitoring programs.¹³ These alternatives can be based on an individualized assessment of each family in order to support the well-being of children and ensure court appearance and compliance with any final court orders.¹⁴

11. In conclusion, separating children from their families or detaining children in family prisons is not in the public health interest of the country or its residents.

17 DECLARATION OF DR. JOSEPH
18 GALLEGOS IN SUPPORT OF 19 MOTION FOR A PRELIMINARY
20 INJUNCTION

21 I, Joseph Gallegos, declare as follows:

22 1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated
23 herein.

24 2. I have a doctorate in social work from the University of Denver, a master's 25 degree in social work from Portland State University ("PSU"), and a B.S. in psychology from 26 PSU.

27 3. I am currently a member of the Oregon Commission on Hispanic Affairs. From 28 2013-207, I was a member of the Oregon House of Representatives, representing the Hillsboro
29 area in Washington County, Oregon, an area that has a Latino population of over 20 percent.

30 4. My background is that I was born in San Antonio, Texas. My parents moved to 31 Portland during WWII to work in shipyards. After the war, the family transitioned to summer 32

1 farm-work—living in migrant worker camps throughout the Willamette valley and finishing
 2 the season picking hops in Yakima valley. At 17, I spent my last summer working in the 3 fields. I spent the next ten years working in the Portland shipyards while completing my Viet 4 Nam era military duty with one year in the regular US Air Force and three years with the 5 Oregon Air National Guard. While working in the shipyard, I also attended night school at 6 Portland Community College and then PSU. At PSU, I earned a Bachelor of Science degree in 7 psychology with a minor in sociology and a certificate in social work. I went directly into the 8 MSW program at Portland state where my practicum experiences included an internship at the 9 JD Long Juvenile Detention Center; Family Counseling (with Latino and Native American 10 families) in NW Portland and community organizing with SE Impact; and as a Teaching
 11 Assistant with a student clinical unit at the Salem mental hospital and finally as an instructor
 12 during my final semester teaching a course on “Chicano Mental Health” to first-year MSW 13 students.

14 5. In my professional opinion, experience and understanding, the federal 15 government’s family separation policy has created significant trauma within Oregon’s 16 immigrant community (and nationwide). My local area in Washington County, Oregon has 17 experienced a large number of immigration-related family separations when parents are taken 18 from their children, and the same is very probably occurring with the parents and children who 19 have been subject to the federal government’s latest policy. This often leads to a toxic stress 20 reaction on the part of both children and parents. Toxic stress is cumulative and permanent and 21 affects an individual both physiologically and psychologically.

22 6. Toxic stress from family separations often causes illness in children, causes 23 them to miss school or to act out at school. It often affects their academic performance. In 24 Oregon, almost 25 percent of the K-12 school population is Latino, so the effect is felt 25

1 7. This is also concerning with regard to Oregon's economic future. These 2 students are the future workforce of the state.

16 DECLARATION OF LINDA
17 CASTILLO

18 I, Linda Castillo, declare as follows:

19 1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.

20 2. I am the Chair of the Oregon Commission of Hispanic Affairs (“Commission”).

21 The Commission was created by the 1983 Oregon Legislative Assembly to work for the 22 implementation of economic, social, legal, and political equality for Hispanics in Oregon. The 23 Commission monitors existing programs and legislation to ensure that the needs of Hispanics in Oregon are met. The Commission researches problems and issues and recommends appropriate action, maintains a liaison between the Hispanic community and government entities, and encourages Hispanic representation on state boards and commissions.

24 3. I have an M.S. in Clinical Psychology from the University of San Francisco and 25 a B.S. in Psychology from the University of Santa Clara. I have worked for 26 years in local

1 government in Clark County, Washington, and Multnomah County, Oregon, as a mental health 2 consultant, program manager and director and also in nonprofits and in direct service to 3 communities of color and managing, providing technical assistance to teams working with 4 diverse communities in the Bay Area, Chicago and the Pacific NW. I have focused in my career
 5 on diversity and equity consulting and mental health cultural issues. In the state of Washington, 6 I am certified as an Ethnic Minority Mental Health specialist with ethnic minorities but in 7 particular Latino adults and children. I provide consultation to several Mental Health agencies
 8 in SW Washington. I currently work at the City of Portland in the office of Neighborhood
 9 Involvement's New Portlanders Program whose charge is immigrant and refugee integration.

10 4. My background is that I am a bilingual, bicultural first-generation Latina of 11 Mexican heritage. My parents are from the Zacatecas and Michoacán. I was born and raised in 12 Northern California as the eldest daughter of farm workers, I am the first in my family to graduate 13 from high school, attend college, and complete graduate school with a Masters in Clinical 14 Psychology. As a seasoned Qualified Mental Health Professional in practice, I provided 15 culturally specific and bilingual services to Latino families.

16 5. In my professional opinion, experience and understanding, the federal 17 government policy of separating families and children will likely cause families to experience
 18 toxic stress and perpetuate fatal outcomes. Toxic stress can be either internalized such that a 19 person, particularly a child, can emotionally and physically shut down and refuse to eat and/or 20 eat and/or sleep excessively. Toxic stress can also be externalized, as evidenced by extreme,
 21 inconsolable crying, temper tantrums, anxious restlessness, hypervigilance, acting out 22 aggressively, and even engaging in self-harm (i.e. headbanging, cutting) because no self-23 soothing, calming, or comforting opportunities are offered to mitigate the stress the children are 24 experiencing. Continuous exposure to high levels of stress of the unknown or not knowing what 25 will happen next when separated from a parent or trusted caretaker affects the child's brain
 26

1 development in a way similar to that experienced by kidnap victims, prisoners of war or sufferers
 2 of PTSD. Unborn children and child brain development is particularly vulnerable to extreme 3 stress because it is still developing, growing, and it can lead to abnormal neurological 4 development and overload the brain with stress hormones (neurotransmitters) which 5 communicate with brain cells and will continue to trigger a stress response and psychical
 6 reactions throughout the body and remain on high alert. Too much toxic stress has an extremely 7 debilitating effect and at worse be fatal leading to self-harm or suicidal behaviors.

8 6. Children separated from their parents, even when they are ultimately reunited, 9 can suffer extreme separation anxiety, for example refusing to go to school and be away or out 10 of sight of family members. Fear is debilitating. In fact, this effect is also occurring among 11 immigrant families in Oregon who have not been separated as they are afraid of separation or 12 that their parent will not be home when they return from school. Parents also are suffering 13 feelings of excessive hopelessness and helplessness, in some cases leading to symptoms such as 14 depression, anxiety disorders and retriggering post-traumatic stress disorders. At baseline these 15 families stress response will be magnifying their reactivity to stress throughout their life time;
 16 leading to considerable health impacts such as increased cardiac conditions, high blood pressure,
 17 diabetes, and increased potential for strokes. Bottom line it alters bodies, it alters brains, and it 18 negatively alters health.

19 7. The 'Zero Tolerance' policies which separate families are dangerous, cruel,
 20 inhuman and a violation of basic human and legal rights. The Latino culture values and reveres 21 family as sacred, the centerpiece of our existence. To tear a child away from their parent or 22 trusted caretaker is akin to driving a stake into the very heart of our Latino communities and 23 cultural traditions. Let us not return to a mindset that creates polices that institutionalize and 24 condone genocide of ethnic and cultural communities here in the USA. We are a nation of 25 nations, that is our strength and that diversity is what makes us stronger, beautiful and brighter.

1 We all deserve an opportunity to pursue the American Dream and not be subjected to the 2 American nightmare that separates children, babies from their parents and 3 loved ones. We are better than this.

DECLARATION OF LAURA S.
BROWN, PH.D., A.B.P.P., IN SUPPORT OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

I, Laura S. Brown, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all of the facts stated herein.

I. Background and Qualifications

2. I am a licensed clinical and forensic psychologist in the State of Washington and hold a Diplomate in Clinical Psychology from the American Board of Professional Psychology. I earned my Bachelors of Arts in Psychology from Case Western Reserve University (1972), my Master of Arts in Clinical Psychology (1975) and my Doctor of Philosophy in Clinical Psychology (1977) from Southern Illinois University.

1 3. I have held academic positions for over 30 years, including the following:
 2 Courtesy Clinical Professor, Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences, University
 3 of Washington (2015-present); Clinical Assistant Professor, Smith College School for Social 4 Work (2011-2012); Adjunct Professor of Clinical Psychology, Washington School of 5 Professional Psychology (2006-2009); Professor of Psychology, Washington School of 6 Professional Psychology (2001-2006); Clinical Professor of Psychology, University of 7 Washington (1980-1997); Acting Assistant Professor of Psychology, University of 8 Washington (1978-1980); Assistant Professor of Psychology, Southern Illinois University at 9 Carbondale (1977-1978).

10 4. For nearly 40 years, since 1979, I have maintained a private practice of 11 psychotherapy, expert consultation, and forensic psychology. I also supervised clinical 12 psychology and social work graduate students, as the Director and Founder of the Fremont
 13 Community Therapy Project, a clinic for low-income individuals, between 2006 and 2015.

14 5. One of my areas of expertise, and a focus of my clinical, forensic, and 15 academic work, is the assessment and treatment of the psychological and psychosocial effects 16 of trauma exposure. My work includes substantial psychological treatment, supervision of 17 treatment, and expert evaluation of adults with psychological conditions arising from 18 childhood traumatization (e.g. child abuse and neglect, parent-child separation, sexual abuse 19 and violence, abuse of authority and institutional betrayal) as well as adults experiencing 20 harm from recent traumatic events (e.g. domestic violence, rape and other sexual violence, 21 hostile work environment and harassment at work or at school, abuse in the foster care 22 system). I have evaluated and treated persons who, as children, were removed from their 23 parents' home as part of child dependency proceedings and suffered abuse in the foster care
 24 system, as well as immigrant and refugee women fleeing violence who were seeking asylum
 25 or visas to remain in the United States.

1 6. I am an active member and leader in a number of professional organizations
 2 devoted to trauma and trauma recovery, including the American Psychological Association
 3 Division of Trauma Psychology, of which I am a former President, the International Society
 4 for Traumatic Stress Studies, and the International Society for the Study of Trauma and 5 Dissociation. I helped to shape and develop best practices and guidelines for the treatment of 6 Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) as a member of the Guidelines Panel of the American 7 Psychological Association that developed Clinical practice guidelines for the treatment of 8 PTSD in Adults (February 2017). I have been appointed and served as co-editor of special 9 issues of two peer-reviewed journals on treatment of PTSD.

10 7. My academic work includes professional editorial board service on 16
 11 different professional journals since 1980, including the following devoted to trauma: Journal 12 of Traumatic Stress; Psychological Trauma: Theory, Research, Practice, Policy; and the 13 Journal of Trauma and Dissociation, for which I am the Associate Editor for Clinical Issues.
 14 I have authored 14 books, and over 150 articles and chapters in professional journals or 15 books, many of which deal with issues of trauma, including the following:
 16 Ellis, A., Simiola, V., Brown, L.S., Courtois, C.A. & Cook, J. M. (2018). Effect of evidence-

6 In addition, I was chosen by the American Psychological Association to be the therapist
 7 demonstrating trauma treatment for the APA Psychotherapy Video Series in the videos titled 8 Treating Women Survivors Of Abuse and Treating Men Survivors Of Abuse.

9 8. I have been recognized with over 30 professional honors, awards, and 10 fellowships throughout my career, including the Sarah Haley Award for Clinical Excellence 11 from the International Society for Traumatic Stress Studies, "Fellow" status from the 12 International Society for the Study of Trauma and Dissociation, and the Lifetime
 13 Achievement Award of the Division of Trauma Psychology of the APA. I have also received
 14 the Social Justice and Distinguished Psychologist Awards of the Washington State 15 Psychological Association, and the award for Distinguished Professional Contributions to 16 Public Service from the American Psychological Association.

17 9. I have been qualified as an expert on the topic of psychological trauma in 18 federal courts as well as in state courts in Washington, Oregon, Alaska, California, and 19 Illinois. A true and correct copy of my full C.V. is attached as Exhibit A.

20 10. The following opinions and testimony are based upon my education and 21 experience, and the research and scholarship in the field of trauma psychology, and are 22 extended on a more probable than not basis to a reasonable degree of psychological certainty.
 23 In forming my opinions, I am also guided by the leadership of my professional organization,
 24 the American Psychological Association, and embrace and incorporate by reference herein 25 the APA's policy statement against forcible family separation, as set forth in Exhibit B, as 26

1 well as the letter written by APA's President, Dr. Jessica Henderson Daniel to the U.S.
 2 Departments of Justice and Homeland Security expressing her professional opinion on this 3 matter, as set forth in Exhibit C. The references in this declaration are in short form; the 4 complete citations are included at the end of the declaration.

5 II. Forcible Family Separation Causes Short Term and Long Term Damage

6 11. As set forth in greater detail below, the forcible separation of children from 7 their good-enough and loving parents, as the United States government is currently doing to 8 immigrant families on the southern border, hereinafter "Family Separation," is likely to cause 9 immediate, acute, harm as well as reasonably foreseeable long-term damage and harm to 10 both the parents and the children (Rojas-Flores, Clements, Koo, & London, 2017).
 11 Psychological harms are also accruing now to the citizens and legal residents of Washington
 12 and the United States as a result of these actions by the Federal government.

13 A. Trauma and Its Effects on Psychological and Physical Health

14 12. Traumatic stressors include a range of experiences that threaten the safety or 15 life of humans (American Psychiatric Association, 2013, Dalenberg, Straus & Carlson, 16 2017). Family Separation is, by and of itself, a disruption to the bonds of attachment between 17 good-enough parents and their children and constitutes a traumatic stressor. Grief and 18 bereavement can also be traumatic when the circumstances of the loss are unusually painful
 19 and out of control of the persons experiencing loss, as is the case for the parents and children
 20 subject to Family Separation. (Pearlman, Wortman, Feuer, Farber & Rando, 2014). Extensive 21 research conducted over the past fifty years documents short and long-term effects on 22 physical and mental health of one-time and repeated trauma exposures in childhood and 23 adulthood (Gold, Cook, & Dalenberg, 2017). Trauma is a biopsychosocial as well as 24 spiritual/existential challenge to human beings, and affects its targets on all of those variables
 25 (Brown, 2008).

1 13. The likely effects and consequences of traumatic stress and trauma exposure,
 2 like Family Separation, include the following: depressed mood, anxiety, panic, terror,
 3 intrusive thoughts, social withdrawal, substance abuse, suicidality, increased risk of acting-4 out behaviors, self-harm, complicated grief, problematic relationships, difficulties in 5 parenting, health problems, hopelessness, helplessness (Gold, Cook & Dalenberg, 2017).
 6 These problems can be long-lasting and at times are disabling and debilitating.

7 14. If it cannot be prevented, traumatic stress can be effectively treated. The 8 sooner that treatment is offered, the more likely a person is to recover to their prior level of 9 functioning. Post-traumatic symptoms that persist over time are less amenable to even the 10 most effective of treatments and may become disabling. A number of effective treatments are 11 now available for traumatized people. These include, treatments for children-Trauma-12 Focused CBT (TF-CBT) and Eye Movement Desensitization Reprocessing (EMDR) – and 13 for adults - EMDR, Prolonged Exposure (PE) and Cognitive Processing Therapy (CPT).
 14 EMDR, PE and CPT are utilized by the Veterans' Administration, for example, in the 15 treatment of combat veterans with PTSD. These treatments have been developed for 16 individuals experiencing a one-time trauma exposure, and are not known to be as effective 17 with people having repeated trauma exposures (American Psychological Association, 18 Guideline Development Panel for the Treatment of PTSD in Adults (2017 February). Clinical 19 practice guideline for the treatment of Posttraumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) in adults.
 20 Retrieved from: <http://www.apa.org/about/offices/directorates/guidelines/ptsd.pdf>.

21 15. Under the right conditions, and with the right supports, people can make 22 substantial recovery from trauma exposures. In addition to appropriate psychotherapeutic 23 treatments, a number of other important psychosocial factors improve the likelihood of a 24 person's recovery to their prior adequate-to-good psychological functional capacities. These 25 factors include the availability of social and familial support, religion and faith, and an 26

1 optimistic temperament. Children are particularly dependent upon the family structure, and 2 on parental love, care, and attachment, to cope with traumatic stress. Normally, parents serve
 3 as a “buffer” and protective force between youth and outside stressors. Under the Family
 4 Separation policy, then good-enough parents are forcibly separated, and made unavailable to 5 their children, children are doubly harmed: they experience the acute stress of the separation 6 and also are undermined in their ability to handle and recover from that and other traumas in 7 their lives. Alternatively, when good-enough parents are available, their presence is a 8 powerful protective and mitigating factor assisting children in being both resilient in the face
 9 of trauma and recovering from trauma when they have been affected by it (Bolton, Jordan, 10 Lubin & Litz, 2017).

11 16. Trauma of human origin has long been identified as worse for its targets than 12 are natural disasters. This is because human agency or neglect in causing or allowing trauma 13 to occur undermines our necessary human capacities to trust in one another. We rely, as 14 human beings, on other humans keeping implicit social contracts to care for and protect one 15 another, based in evolutionary requirements for humans to relate to one another in order to 16 survive (Figley, Ellis, Reuther & Gold, 2017).

17 17. People also rely on powerful institutions, which stand as proxies for our 18 relationships to the larger society, to protect us when we come to them for help in our time of 19 need. When those institutions betray trust, either by failing to protect or by putting people in 20 the way of more harm, then people suffer from Institutional Betrayal. (Smith & Freyd, 21 2014). Institutional betrayal is by and of itself a form of trauma. When combined with other 22 traumatic stressors, it increases the severity of distress felt by the traumatized person and 23 complicates the process of recovery from trauma. When people witness or observe an 24 institution betraying other people, their own trust in that institution is affected and they may 25 experience trauma as well.

1 18. Until very recently, most people around the world have perceived the U.S. as a 2 beacon of hope and safety, a potential place of refuge should their country of origin become 3 too dangerous. The words of The New Colossus, the poem engraved within the Statue of 4 Liberty, speak to this image of the U.S. People flee here for safety because this is a country
 5 of laws and constitutional protections, of equality of opportunity and care for the vulnerable,
 6 of access to legal redress when injustice has been done. The families impacted by Family
 7 Separation, many of whom report that they are seeking asylum in the U. S., a country in 8 which they placed their faith and trust, are in my opinion likely experiencing institutional 9 betrayal at the hands of a government that they had hoped would protect them and at least 10 would operate consistently with the rule of law. This institutional betrayal adds a layer of 11 severity and complexity to the trauma of forced Family Separation.

12 B. Effects of Forced Family Separation on Children

13 19. Family Separation is a traumatic loss for the children who are separated from 14 their parent, as a result of which they are likely to experience a range of problematic
 15 emotions, including terror, fear, sadness and grief, confusion, and distrust. Even when a 16 parent has been abusive to a child, separating the child from the parent is perceived as painful 17 by the child; when the parent is loving and caring, and offers secure attachment, a forced and 18 sudden separation is a profound trauma and loss for that child. Family Separation is likely to 19 cause immediate and extreme psychological harm, including post-traumatic symptoms such 20 as nightmares, and other manifestations of anxiety and depression, all of which are likely to 21 increase in severity the longer the separation lasts and lead to the potential development of 22 problematic coping strategies in both the near and long term. It is likely that Family
 23 Separation will cause permanent harm to many of the children who are forcibly separated 24 from good-enough and loving parents, impairing their psychological, mental, social and 25 physical development well into their lives, and resulting in long-lasting psychological injury

1 and conditions, including PTSD, and other trauma-related disorders. See the well-
 2 documented literature on Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACES)

5 20. While the separation of a child from a good enough primary adult caregiver is 6 traumatic in any event, many factors present in the Federal government's current Family
 7 Separation policy increase the traumatic nature of these separations. These include: the lack 8 of information available to the children about why they are being separated from their 9 parents; the suddenness of the separation and lack of opportunity to say goodbye; the lack of 10 an opportunity to plan for and discuss the separation with their parents; the effect of the 11 child's developmental stage on their capacities to make sense of what is occurring, leading to 12 self-blame, particularly on the part of much younger children; fear about what is happening 13 to the parent, and, given the circumstances that have led some of these families to leave their 14 country of origin and seek asylum, fear that the parent may have been taken away to be killed
 15 or disappeared (Rojas-Flores, Clements, Koo, & London, 2017).

16 21. For the children and families who are attempting to escape endemic and 17 sometimes government-sanctioned violence in their countries of origin, and those who have 18 been exposed to high levels of violence and trauma prior to this new traumatic event, the 19 impact of the Family Separation is even more severe (Suárez-Orozco, Bang, & Kim, 2010).

20 22. Taking children from their good-enough parents creates additional risks that 21 arise during the process of placing children into non-family care. These children are now 22 being kept in temporary holding spaces, institutional settings, or foster homes of strangers.
 23 Even the very best of institutions and foster homes cannot match the love and care given by a 24 protective parent; in some instances, sadly, institutions and foster homes become places in 25 which already-vulnerable children are exposed to physical, emotional, and sexual abuse or 26

1 neglect. The psychological cost to the children subjected to Family Separation thus can grow
 2 exponentially.

3 23. Studies of other children similarly separated from their families in institutional or 4 foster homes reveal that they suffer attachment loss and traumatic bereavement, leading to 5 the development of a wide range of physical and psychological symptoms (Wilt, Maltby & 6 Cook, 2017, Evans-Campbell, Pearson, Walters & Campbell, 2012). Children subject to 7 Family Separation are likely to experience deterioration of their mental condition and sense 8 of well being, and develop psychologically abnormal conditions with diagnoses including:
 9 anxiety, depression, and PTSD. Many of these children are likely to manifest short-term
 10 symptoms of this trauma, including crying, difficulty sleeping, difficulty eating, 11 aggressiveness/acting out, regression (e.g., losing language abilities or toilet training), or 12 withdrawal from others. Others may appear stoic, strong, hardened, and brave – especially 13 in circumstances where they have lost trust in adults, or are surrounded by strangers who may 14 not speak their language, and thus feel unsafe to expose their vulnerability. It is likely that 15 this sub-group of Family Separation children are experiencing dissociation, an involuntary 16 psychological defense against overwhelming and intolerable terror in a situation from which 17 there is no escape (Steele, Boon, & Van der Hart, 2017). Dissociation at the time of trauma is 18 a predictor of more persistent and severe post-traumatic symptoms later in life. All children
 19 subject to Family Separation are likely to be experiencing trauma and have had damage done 20 to their psychological well being, regardless of the coping mechanism they use to address it.
 21 Longitudinal research on traumatized children (Putnam, 1997, Widom, 1999, Widom, 22 Horan, & Brzustowicz, 2014) has shown that for many such children, trauma has a “sleeper 23 effect,” with symptoms going underground and not appearing until later in life.

24 24. Children who are separated from good enough parents during critical periods
 25 of child development experience attachment loss at a period that is likely to result in lasting 26

1 damage to their relationships with their parents, to their social development and their 2 capacity to develop trusting relationships, to their behavioral development, and to their 3 physical health. The harm to the children is likely to be greater if the separation is prolonged.
 4 Our best data about the effects of involuntary separation from parents comes from observing 5 the trajectory of American Indian (Evans-Campbell, Pearson, Walters & Campbell, 2012),
 6 Canadian First Nations (Wilt, Maltby & Cook, 2017), and Australian Aboriginal children
 7 (Aboriginal Legal Services of Western Australia, 1995) who were taken forcibly from their 8 loving families and placed into institutional care. In these populations of people who were 9 forcibly separated by a government from loving families and cultures, the rates of a variety of 10 physical and mental illnesses are very high and higher than in the general population. There 11 is documented excess occurrence of depression, anxiety, substance abuse disorders and other 12 compulsive acting-out disorders, PTSD and suicidality. These populations of people also 13 have much higher rates of illness and premature death than the general population. They are 14 more likely to serve time in prison, more likely to be homeless, and less likely to complete 15 their education. The populations of indigenous people who have experienced this kind of 16 government-caused forcible separation from good enough parents are large enough that these 17 data are robust and can likely be generalized to our understanding of other groups of children 18 similarly treated.

19 25. In the present Family Separation situation, similar to what happened to the 20 indigenous peoples of the U.S., Canada, and Australia, the children are being forcibly
 21 separated from parents, many of whom are loving and protective, and many of whom report
 22 that they were willing to risk much to flee an unsafe situation and get their children to safety.
 23 Even if and when these children are reunited with their parents, the children's sense of safety 24 and capacity to trust in their parents has now been undermined; this experience is likely to 25 cause long-term damage and undermine their trust in those parents' ability to be able to 26

1 protect them in the future (Chaudry, 2011). In my experience, many adults in treatment for
 2 the long-term effects of childhood trauma still struggle to make emotional sense of decisions
 3 and actions of their parents even when they can intellectually comprehend them. These adults
 4 still experience pain and suffering from those decisions. For the children, all of this is simply 5 inexplicable fear and loss, and is often a source of anger against the parent who they believe 6 has failed them. It is common for the child to turn its anger on the nearest person, and the 7 previously most trusted person - the parent –and not the U.S. government.

8 26. The impact of the trauma from Family Separation is worsened by the presence
 9 of institutional betrayal (Smith & Freyd, 2015). In this case, it is the Federal government that 10 has decided to separate these families. This policy has psychological consequences; it 11 undermines trust and overall sense of well being, and creates a sense in those directly 12 affected and those who are observing it, of being at risk, rather than protected, by 13 government and institutions. We can see this phenomenon in the populations of indigenous 14 adults who were forcibly separated as children from loving families by governments. U.S.
 15 resident and citizen children who become aware of the Family Separation policy through the 16 news media are also likely to suffer psychological harm, especially those who previously
 17 immigrated to the United States or those who share an ethnic identity with the children
 18 subjected to forcible separation from their parents via the process of insidious traumatization
 19 (Root, 1992), in which trauma occurring to those who resemble us or remind us of ourselves 20 can become traumatizing to the observer.

21 27. Forcible separation of a child from a parent, through incarceration or detention
 22 of that parent, constitutes an Adverse Childhood Experience (ACE). As such, Family
 23 Separation constitutes an ACE. Children who experience two or more ACES are more likely 24 to experience long-term psychological and behavioral problems, such as depression, anxiety, 25 and substance abuse, as well as chronic physical conditions including heart disease, 26

1 pregnancy loss, and early death. ACES are a well-documented phenomenon that has been
 2 publicized by the United States Department of Health and Human Services
 3 (https://www.samhsa.gov/capt/practicing-effective-prevention/prevention-behavioral-
 4 health/adverse-childhood-experiences doi June 16 2018). As a result of Family Separation,
 5 the Federal government is causing harm, and aggravating pre-existing vulnerabilities of those 6 who may already be at risk, by adding at least one ACE (separation from a parent, parental 7 incarceration) to the lives of the children involved. It is also removing the most potent and 8 effective protective factor for children at risk, the presence of a protective good enough 9 parent.

10 C. Effects of Family Separation on Parents

11 28. Parents who arrive together with their children at the U.S. border, and then are 12 separated from their children by the U.S. government, are likely to experience immediate and 13 acute psychological harm and injury as a result of that sudden forced separation. A parent's 14 foremost duty is to care and protect their child. This duty of care for children is hard-wired 15 into our DNA by evolution (Schore, 2003). Because humans are born unable to care for 16 themselves, and thus require care from a parent for many years, it is a survival necessity for 17 parents to care for and protect their children (Siegel, 2012). When a child is forcibly and 18 suddenly taken from a parent, the parent is likely to experience that separation as a traumatic 19 loss, leading to feelings of fear, worry, and terror about their child's safety and well-being,
 20 and to shame and a sense of failure due to this out-of-control inability to care and protect 21 their child. They are also likely to experience continuing sadness and grief at the separation.
 22 In addition, in the current circumstance of Family Separation, many parents are being 23 separated from their children suddenly without the chance to prepare the child or even say 24 goodbye, without knowing where they or their children will be taken, without any guarantee 25 of reunification, and often without contact with their children or with long gaps in that 26

1 contact. For those parents who come to the border reporting that they have already suffered
 2 trauma through violence exposures in their countries of origin, and for those reporting that 3 they have fled to the U.S. in the hope of protecting their children and saving their children's 4 lives, these forcible separations are a painful and terrifying betrayal by a government.

6 29. These parents are likely to experience deterioration of their mental and 7 physical health in the aftermath of the forcible separation from their children with symptoms
 8 including: anxiety, depression, PTSD, and other trauma-related disorders. Often they will 9 show short term symptoms of this harm, including depressed mood, nightmares, intrusive 10 thoughts, hypervigilence, suicidality, disordered eating, self-harm, substance abuse, and 11 emotional and social withdrawal. As discussed in the section on children's trauma responses, 12 some of these parents may appear stoic and strong in the face of this loss. As with their 13 children, however, that may be evidence that the trauma is so great that the parent has 14 dissociated from the pain. This dissociation can, in turn, predict greater symptom severity 15 over time.

16 30. In some cases, parental trauma from separation from their children will 17 become unbearable because their available coping mechanisms may be overwhelmed by the 18 sudden loss of the important role of parent and protector of the child. In such cases, it is not 19 unreasonable to expect some parents to attempt to take their own lives out of terror and 20 despair. I am aware of media reports of at least two suicides of parents forcibly separated
 21 from their children at the U.S. border. These separations have, in effect, permanently 22 destroyed these parents' hope that they might some day raise their children in relative safety.

23 31. There is long-term damage to the adults who experience trauma. These 24 parents have experienced a profound betrayal by the government of the U.S. Their children 25 have been "disappeared" by the Federal government. In Latin America, children who have 26 been disappeared by a government have often been killed; thus, the governmental

1 disappearance of a child carries with it a particular form of terror for parents from Latin
 2 America. This forcible separation can undermine the families even once they are reunited, as 3 both parent and child will be suffering the effects of the separation. The parents will be 4 impaired in their capacities to parent at a time when the children, also suffering, will be more
 5 than ever in need of their parents' love and care. Research on children of mothers with 6 depression, which may characterize many of these parents, indicates that their children are at 7 higher risk for a range of psychological disorders and behavioral problems. These problems
 8 affect children's school functioning, and can lead to conflict and disruption of relationships
 9 within families (Canadian Paediatric Society, 2004). It is reasonable to extrapolate from this 10 robust body of knowledge about depressed parents in general to the parents suffering Family
 11 Separation, whose depressed mood will thus affect their children's functioning.

12 32. Because of the harms done to psychological and physical well-being by this 13 forcible separation from their children, and the concurrent loss of positive coping strategies 14 inherently required for being a parent, these parents are likely to have increased needs for 15 both mental health and medical treatment. I can predict this given the known biological and 16 psychological consequences of prolonged traumatic stress, of which this forcible separation 17 is an example. These parents will need access to trauma-informed psychotherapy. They are 18 likely to suffer from a number of somatic complaints that are often expressions of post-
 19 traumatic symptoms within their culture of origin, including increased pain of unknown 20 physical origin, headaches, and gastrointestinal distress. Because prolonged stress leads to 21 systemic physical inflammation, these parents are also at higher risk over the lifespan to 22 develop cardiovascular disease, cancer, and auto-immune diseases, given that systemic 23 inflammation has been implicated in all of these disorders. The health and mental health
 24 burdens imposed by this forced separation on an already vulnerable population of parents 25 will be large and long-lasting.
 26

1 D. Effects of Family Separation on Others

3 33. This Family Separation policy is also causing, and will continue to cause,
 4 harm to the emotional well-being of current legal residents and citizens of Washington State.
 5 Some people will have their own prior traumas of forced separation from parents re-
 6 activated, leading to a resurgence in symptoms. Populations at risk in this way include 7 indigenous people sent to government schools, survivors of the Holocaust who were 8 separated from their parents, and many former foster children. These individuals' mental 9 health is being placed at risk by the policy of forced separation of children and parents at the 10 U.S. border. Their physical well-being is also likely to be adversely affected, as the medical 11 consequences of psychosocial stress and trauma will likely be increased for them.

12 34. This policy is also likely to be frightening to other immigrants and refugees
 13 currently living in Washington State. This apparent sudden change to how the United States 14 treats families coming to its borders is likely to evoke feelings of insecurity and instability in 15 them, and create a sense of institutional betrayal. These immigrant and refugee parents may 16 begin to fear that they, too, may be forcibly separated from their children, particularly if the 17 parents' legal status is ambiguous in any way. The apparent unpredictability and fast-18 changing nature of US policy on this matter undermines faith and trust in the Federal 19 government, and creates fear, anxiety, and possible reactivation of prior post-traumatic 20 symptoms.

21 35. Finally, these policies affect many other citizens of Washington State who are 22 not immigrants, refugees, or persons who have experienced forcible parent-child separation.
 23 Most parents can imagine how they might feel were a government to forcibly remove their 24 child from their care. Children who are exposed to this news are being made aware that their 25 relationships with their parents may not be entirely secure, and that a government can decide 26 to pull children away from parents who are good enough. These other citizens of our state and of the U.S. are at risk of emotional harm because they have been made into often-helpless bystanders to a scenario that frightens and upsets them. Helplessness and feelings of disempowerment, and governmental actions that reduce trust, undermine people's well-being.

III. Conclusion

36. The Family Separation policy of the Federal government requiring the separation of certain families who enter the U.S. causes serious and severe harm to the mental health and well-being of the children and parents who are subjected to it. This policy also causes harm to current legal residents of the United States, including citizens, legal permanent residents and immigrants, refugees, and asylum seekers. The costs of being directly or indirectly subjected to this trauma are likely to be high, not only to the persons directly affected, but also to the State of Washington and the U.S. society, both now and over time.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of Washington and the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

DATED this 19th day of June, 2018 at Seattle, Washington.

Statement of APA President Regarding the Traumatic Effects of Separating Immigrant Families

WASHINGTON — Following is the statement of APA President Jessica Henderson Daniel, PhD, regarding the deleterious impact on the health and well-being of children and families who are separated as they seek to enter the United States without proper documentation:

"The administration's policy of separating children from their families as they attempt to cross into the United States without documentation is not only needless and cruel, it threatens the mental and physical health of both the children and their caregivers. Psychological research shows that immigrants experience unique stressors related to the conditions that led them to flee their home countries in the first place. The longer that children and parents are separated, the greater the reported symptoms of anxiety and depression for the children. Negative outcomes for children include psychological distress, academic difficulties and disruptions in their development.

"The American Psychological Association calls on the administration to rescind this policy and keep immigrant families intact (/advocacy/immigration/index.aspx) . We support practical, humane immigration policies that consider the needs of immigrants, and particularly immigrant families. We must adopt policies that take into account what we know about the harmful, long-term psychological effects of separation on children and their families. This is not an acceptable policy to counter unlawful immigration."

The American Psychological Association, in Washington, D.C., is the largest scientific and professional organization representing psychology in the United States. APA's membership includes nearly 115,700 researchers, educators, clinicians, consultants and students. Through its divisions in 54 subfields of psychology and affiliations with 60 state, territorial and Canadian provincial associations, APA works to advance the creation, communication and application of psychological knowledge to benefit society and improve people's lives.

President Donald Trump
The White House

Washington, DC 20500

Dear President Trump:

On behalf of the American Psychological Association (APA), we are writing to express our deep concern and strong opposition to the Administration's new policy of separating immigrant parents and children who are detained while crossing the border. We previously wrote to then Secretary of Homeland Security John Kelly on April 5, 2017, about this matter. Based on empirical evidence of the psychological harm that children and parents experience when separated, we implore you to reconsider this policy and commit to the more humane practice of housing families together pending immigration proceedings to protect them from further trauma.

APA is the leading scientific and professional organization representing psychology in the United States. Our membership includes researchers, educators, clinicians, consultants, and students. APA works to advance the creation, communication, and application of psychological knowledge to benefit society and improve people's lives. We have 115,700 members and affiliates across the United States and in many other countries, many of whom serve immigrant youth and adults in a wide range of settings, including schools, community centers, hospitals and refugee resettlement centers.

The current policy calls for children to be removed from their parents and placed for an often indeterminate period of time in the custody of the Office of Refugee Resettlement. Decades of psychological research have determined that it is in the best interest of the child and the family to keep families together. Families fleeing their homes to seek sanctuary in the United States are already under a tremendous amount of stress.¹ Sudden and unexpected family separation, such as separating families at the border, can add to that stress, leading to emotional trauma in children.² Research also suggests that the longer that parents and children are separated, the greater the reported symptoms of anxiety and depression are for children.³ Adverse childhood experiences, such as parent-child separation, are important social determinants of mental disorders. For children, traumatic events can lead to the development of post-traumatic stress disorder and other mental health disorders that can cause long lasting effects.⁴ Furthermore, immigration policies, such as separating families at the border, can also adversely impact those immigrants who are already in the United States. They can suffer from feelings of stigmatization, social exclusion, anger, and hopelessness, as well as fear for the future.⁵

As a tragic example of the current policy's serious potential for harm, a Honduran man who was separated from his wife and 3-year-old son after he crossed the border into Texas recently took his own life while detained in a holding cell, according to the Customs and Border Protection officials, public records, and media reports.⁶ There are also reports of detained immigrants foregoing legitimate claims for asylum by pleading guilty to expedite the return of their separated children and reports of parents being deported while their children, including infants, remain in custody. These incidents serve to highlight the mental health crisis for many families caused by the Administration's policy.

Given these considerations, a change in immigration policy regarding the detention of immigrant families at the border is desperately needed – from separating parents and children to housing them together and providing needed physical and mental health services. As psychologists, we have documented multiple harmful effects of parent-child separation on children's emotional and psychological development and well-being and urge that the current policy of family separation be reversed. Should you have any questions regarding these comments, please contact Serena Dávila, J.D., with our Public Interest Directorate at sdavila@apa.org or 202-336-6061.

Defendants.

I, Kathleen M. Roche, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all of the facts stated herein.

I Background and Qualifications

2. I am an Associate Professor at Milken Institute School of Public Health at the George Washington University in Washington, D.C. I have held this position since 2012. Milken Institute School of Public Health is one of the most preeminent schools of public health

1 in the United States. It is currently ranked by U.S. News & World Report as the 14th best public
 2 health graduate program in the United States.

3 3. I work in the Department of Prevention and Community Health, where I teach 4 several courses on child development and public health including: Child Development and 5 Public Health, Social Ecology of Child & Adolescent Health, Social and Behavioral 6 Approaches to Public Health, Social and Behavioral Science Research Methods, and Data
 7 Management and Analysis.

8 4. I hold a Bachelor of Arts in Art History from Emory University (1988), a Master 9 of Social Work from the University of Georgia School of Social Work (1993), and a Doctor of 10 Philosophy from the Department of Maternal and Child Health at the Johns Hopkins 11 Bloomberg School of Public Health (1999).

12 5. I have held academic positions for over 10 years. Prior to working at Milken 13 Institute School of Public Health, I was an Associate Professor at Georgia State University in 14 the Department of Sociology (2010-2012) and an Assistant Professor at Johns Hopkins 15 Bloomberg School of Public Health in the Department of Population, Family, and 16 Reproductive Health (2007-2010).

17 6. My academic work includes professional editorial board service. I am a 18 Consulting Editor or Editorial Board member for seven family and social science journals
 19 including the Journal of Marriage and Family, Journal of Research on Adolescence, Journal
 20 of Family Theory and Review, Journal of Youth and Adolescence, Journal of Family
 21 Psychology, Adolescent Research Review, and Applied Developmental Science. I serve as a 22 reviewer for 14 additional journals.

23 7. I am a Regular Member of the Psychosocial Development, Risk, and Prevention
 24 Study Section at the National Institutes of Health. I am also a member of flagship professional 25 organizations focused on research with youth, including the Society for Research on 26

1 Adolescence and the Society for Research on Child Development; in addition, for several 2 years, I was a member of the National Council on Family Relations.

3 8. I have held several research positions and affiliations during my career. I was 4 the Director of Research at the Johns Hopkins Leadership in Adolescent Health Training
 5 Program at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine. I sit on the Senate Research Committee at 6 The George Washington University and lead the community-engagement research module of 7 the Clinical and Translational Science Institute at Children's Hospital in Washington, DC. I 8 held several research positions at Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health.

9 9. I have extensive research experience over the past 24 years. I have been the 10 Principal Investigator or Co-Investigator in at least 15 studies. Many of these are focused on 11 immigrant communities, U.S. Latino families, adolescent adjustment, or Latino adolescent 12 health and well-being.

13 10. My research program examines parenting influences on the health and well-
 14 being of adolescents facing challenges tied to immigration status, neighborhood disadvantage, 15 acculturation to the U.S., and/or discrimination. My research is informed by multiple 16 disciplines: developmental psychology, urban sociology, family social sciences, and social 17 epidemiology.

18 11. I have a high level of expertise in Latino immigrant families, adolescent health
 19 and well-being, and parents raising adolescents in challenging conditions. I have written over 20 30 peer-reviewed journal articles, most of which relate to these subjects.

21 12. My research examining the impacts of recent immigration actions and news on 22 the lives of U.S. Latino parents has been featured in national media including the NBC Nightly 23 News, US News & World Report, and Vox.com.

24 13. I have attached a true and complete copy of my curriculum vitae as Exhibit A 25 to this Declaration.

1 II. Impacts of Immigration Actions and News on the Lives of U.S. Latino Families

2 14. Together with three colleagues, I recently conducted a study on the impacts of 3 immigration policy changes and news on U.S. Latino families raising adolescent children. We 4 published our findings in the Journal of Adolescent Health in March 2018. The article is 5 entitled Impacts of Immigration Actions and News and the Psychological Distress of U.S.
 6 Latino Parents Raising Adolescents, and it is attached as Exhibit B to this Declaration.

7 15. My co-authors in this study were Elizabeth Vaquera, Ph.D (Department of 8 Sociology and Department of Public Policy & Public Administration, The George Washington
 9 University); Rebecca M.B. White, Ph.D (T. Denny Sanford School of Social and Family
 10 Dynamics, Arizona State University); and Maria Ivonne Rivera, M.P.H. (The Rivera Group, 11 Washington, D.C.).

12 16. Our study is one of the first empirical accounts of how recent immigration 13 policy changes and news about those changes have impacted U.S. Latino parents—and by 14 extension their teenage children. The study evaluated parents' behavioral and emotional 15 responses to recent immigration actions and news and investigated how these responses are 16 associated with Latino parents' psychological distress. It provides some of the first evidence 17 to date indicating how U.S. Latino parents of adolescents cope, react, and manage emotions in 18 response to immigration news and actions.

19 17. We began our analysis by recruiting 213 Latino (mostly Central American) 20 parents of adolescents from a suburb of a large mid-Atlantic city. One-third of the parents in 21 the study were undocumented. The remaining two-thirds were living in the U.S. legally, as 22 citizens, permanent residents, or under Temporary Protected Status (TPS). Virtually all of the 23 Latino adolescents whose parents were in this study were U.S. citizens, protected under the 24 Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program, or eligible for DACA.
 25

1 18. We asked these parents a series of questions to find out how U.S. immigration
 2 actions and news had affected them in recent months. In addition, we used a standard 3 questionnaire to assess symptoms of depression, anxiety, and other mental health problems.

5 19. We collected these surveys in the fall of 2017. Numerous immigration policy
 6 changes took place before, during, and immediately after our collection, including: (1)
 7 expanded eligibility for deportation, (2) the elimination of and/or plans to eliminate TPS, and
 (3) an end to DACA.

8 20. The results of our study strongly suggest that the recent changes in U.S.
 9 immigration policy have triggered serious psychological distress for many Latino parents,
 10 including those living in the United States legally.

11 21. Parents in all residency statuses reported that they “very often” or “almost 12 always/always” experience adverse emotional and behavioral consequences due to 13 immigration actions and news (See Table 2 in Exhibit B). These consequences include:
 14 difficulty getting or keeping a job; difficulty imagining a better job or more money; worrying
 15 it will be hard for their child to get a job; warning their child to stay away from authorities;
 16 worrying family members will be separated; changing daily routines; avoiding medical care,
 17 police, and services; feeling that their child was negatively affected; worrying it will be hard 18 for their child to finish school; feeling that the parent was negatively affected; worrying about 19 contact with police, authorities; talking to their child about changing their behavior such as 20 where they hang out; and perceiving that their child was affected at school.

21 22. Although TPS parents were more likely than other groups to report concerns 22 about safety and well-being of the family and children, substantial proportions of 23 undocumented, permanent resident, and U.S. citizen parents reported these same concerns.
 24

25 23. A high proportion of the parents (nearly 66%) reported that they very often or 26 always worried about family members getting separated because of immigration actions or

1 news. This included 88% of undocumented parents, 83.8% of TPS parents, 57.1% of 2 permanent resident parents, and 21.6% of U.S. citizen parents.

3 24. A substantial proportion of the parents (nearly 40%) reported that they 4 frequently avoided getting medical care, help from police, or support from social services
 5 because of immigration actions and news. This included 42% of undocumented parents, 62.2%
 6 of TPS parents, 34.3% of permanent resident parents, and 21.6% of U.S. citizen parents.

7 25. Almost half of all parents in this study reported that recent immigration events 8 had led them to very often or always warn their teenagers to stay away from authorities (nearly 9 48%) and to talk to their teenagers about changing their behaviors, such as where they hang 10 out (nearly 47%).

11 26. Almost half of all parents in this study reported that their child had been 12 negatively affected (44%) or that a parent had been negatively affected by immigration actions 13 and news (nearly 45.2%).

14 27. Almost half of all parents in this study reported that, as a result of the 15 immigration actions and news, they were worried that it would be hard for their child to finish 16 school (46%) and they worried about their child getting a job (46.2%), and a substantial 17 proportion reported that their child had been affected at school (nearly 37%).

18 28. Among parents who are not U.S. citizens, more than half (54.3%) moved to the 19 United States in order to escape gangs and violence in their country of origin.

20 29. Extensive research has described stressors experienced by U.S. Latinos, 21 including fear of deportation, exploitation by employers, trauma, distrust in public services,
 22 language barriers, racism, and financial strain. (See, e.g., Cavazos-Rehg et al., 2007; Rhodes 23 et al., 2015; Yoshikawa et al., 2011). These stressors are important predictors of psychological 24 distress, indicated by anxiety, depression, and somatization.

1 30. In our study, we documented substantially higher levels of psychological stress
 2 among U.S. Latino parents who do not have citizenship status. High distress characterized 3 48.6% of TPS parents; 23.2% of undocumented parents; 27.1% of permanent resident parents;
 4 and 8.1% of U.S. citizen parents.

5 31. Parents' adverse responses to immigration changes were associated with a 6 significantly higher odds of a parent reporting high psychological distress. Parents who 7 reported that immigration events caused them to frequently worry about their youth's 8 education or future job chances or about family members being separated had at least a 200% 9 greater odds of reporting high psychological distress.

10 32. In several instances, adverse immigration responses were associated with a 5-11 to 10-fold greater odds of a parent reporting high psychological distress. The responses 12 associated with these high odds of psychological distress included a parent having: been 13 stopped, questioned or harassed by immigration authorities; avoided seeking medical care or 14 assistance from police and government services; talked to their child about changing behaviors 15 such as where the child hangs out; felt negatively affected; believed that their children had 16 been negatively affected; expected that their children would now have a hard time finishing 17 school; and thought that their children had been affected at school.

18 33. Based on our study, we concluded that contemporary immigration actions and 19 news about those actions likely have had profound and far-reaching adverse impacts on U.S.
 20 Latino parents raising adolescents.

21 34. The study shows that the pernicious and harmful impacts of immigration
 22 actions and news may extend to Latino parents across a hierarchy of residency statuses.
 23 Parental worries and behavior modifications tied to immigration actions and news were shown 24 to exist even among U.S. citizens of Latino origin. Across noncitizen groups, especially those 25 with TPS, the effects were most prevalent, with parents experiencing concern for family, as 26

1 indicated by parents warning their children to avoid authorities; avoiding medical care, public
 2 assistance, or the police; and worrying that their children had been negatively affected at school
 3 due to immigration actions and news.

4 35. Permanent resident parents were no different than undocumented parents with 5 respect to several adverse responses to immigration actions and news. These two groups of 6 parents were similar with respect to having frequently talked to their children about changing
 7 behaviors such as where the child hangs out; worried about contact with police and authorities;
 8 felt that the child was negatively affected at school; avoided seeking medical care, help from 9 the police, and public services; changed daily routines; and, warned children to stay away from 10 authorities.

11 36. Evidence suggesting adverse consequences of immigration actions and news 12 across residency statuses is consistent with research indicating that immigration policy can be 13 equally harmful to documented and undocumented Latinos. Our study showed that TPS
 14 parents, and in many cases, permanent resident parents, were harmed by immigration events, 15 as were undocumented parents.

16 37. A substantial proportion of non-U.S. citizen parents frequently engaged in 17 behaviors designed to avoid the attention of government authorities. These parental responses 18 align with prior research indicating that Latino immigrants often hesitate contacting police for 19 fear of mistreatment and/or the deportation of another family member.

20 38. Regardless of residency status, our study also found that a proportion of Latino
 21 parents (approximately 15% to 18%) reported that they “very often” or “always” considered
 22 leaving the United States and/or were stopped, harassed, or questioned by immigration
 23 authorities. These findings support the conclusion drawn by University of California Prof.
 24 Enriquez that “sanctions intended for undocumented immigrants seeped into the lives of 25 individuals who should have been protected by their citizenship status.” (Enriquez, 2015).

1 39. Such high levels of distress among parents raise concerns about immigration
 2 impacts on the entire family, including among teenagers. Previous research suggests that a 3 parent's fear, anxiety or depression can spill over to affect the entire family, and especially 4 teenagers. Studies show that adolescents whose parents are anxious or depressed are at elevated 5 risk of doing poorly in school, adopting risky behaviors, and developing lifelong health and 6 mental health problems. (See, e.g., Wheeler et al., 2015; McAdams et al., 2015; Lieb et al.,
 7 2002). Thus, the costs and burdens of psychological distress extend far beyond an affected 8 individual.

9 40. Our research demonstrated that almost two-thirds of parents frequently worried
 10 about family separation and close to half frequently warned their adolescent children to stay 11 away from authorities, talked to their children about changing behaviors such as where they 12 hang out, and avoided access to medical care, police, and public assistance. These kinds of 13 parent behaviors and parents' psychological distress directly threaten adolescent youth's safety
 14 and mental and physical health

15 41. The vast majority (75%) of parents in this study had adolescents who were U.S.
 16 citizens. The findings show that even Latino adolescents who are citizens and/or have grown 17 up in the United States and are here legally, likely experience increased and serious risks to 18 their health and well-being as a result of immigration actions and news.

19 42. Our study demonstrates that immigration threats can have significant and 20 measurable impacts well beyond the acute harm conferred to the subset of Latinos directly 21 experiencing the events and impacted by the particular immigration policies and actions. This 22 likely is because politics, threats of deportation, and anti-immigrant sentiments lead to 23 widespread fear and anxiety among Latinos, even those not directly affected by the event. This 24 holds true for Latinos of all residency statuses.

1 III. The Likely Impacts of the Family Separation Policy

2 43. The following opinions and testimony about the likely impacts of the family 3 separation policy are based upon my education, experience, research and scholarship, and my 4 expertise in Latino immigrant families in the U.S., and are offered on a more probable than not 5 basis.

6 44. As indicated above, in paragraph 23, our study on the impact of immigration
 7 actions and news revealed that 66% of the U.S. Latino parents surveyed reported that they 8 “very often” or “always” feel worried about family separation. This included 88% of 9 undocumented parents, 83.8% of TPS parents, 57.1% of permanent resident parents, and 10 21.6% of U.S. citizen parents.

11 45. Notably, our study occurred prior to the U.S. government’s immigration policy
 12 implementing family separation. It is likely that the fears of U.S. Latino parents about family 13 separation will be more widespread and will have increased substantially as a result of the 14 family separation policy. This is especially true considering the extensive media coverage and 15 public debate that the family separation policy has generated.

16 46. Our study found that the odds of parents’ high psychological distress are 250%
 17 greater for parents who frequently worry that family members would get separated. As a result 18 of the family separation policy, and the likely more widespread and increased levels of fear, it
 19 is likely that there is also a significant increase in the number of U.S. Latino parents 20 experiencing high levels of psychological distress and harm, which impacts them and adversely 21 impacts their adolescent children.

22 47. As our study also reveals, immigration policies that are focused on a small 23 segment of the population have cascading negative impacts across much larger groups by 24 virtue of the fear that these policies are shown to instill. It is likely the family separation policy 25 is causing high levels of psychological distress and harm to those directly impacted with

1 cascading negative impacts and detriments to the safety, health, and well-being of U.S. Latino
2 families in Washington State and all over the country.

Research Grant Participation

Principal Investigator: “Linking Community and Family Characteristics to Adolescent Adjustment,” NICHD, National Institutes of Health. September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2022. Total: $2,687,934 (directs: $2,037,529).

- Using eight time points of data for a representative sample of 600 Latino parent-youth dyads in an emerging immigrant destination, this study will test an integrative theoretical model specifying the cascade of effects from cultural demands and opportunities in neighborhoods to adolescent externalizing and internalizing problems.

Co-Investigator: “Clinical and Translational Science Institute at Children’s National,” NIH, National Center for Advancing Translational Sciences. July 1, 2016 – June 30, 2021. Total: $22,021,067.

- The primary goal is to provide integrated, cost-effective, investigator-focused resources that overcome research barriers, promote collaborative research, and provide research training with a focus on children’s health. With an emphasis on health disparities and childhood antecedents to adult diseases, CTSI-CN builds upon its pediatric research strengths in areas such as rare diseases, asthma, and neuro-developmental disabilities to collaborate with a national network of 1,200 community health centers.

Principal Investigator: “The US Immigrant Political Climate and US Latino Families: A Mixed Methods Study,” Cross-Disciplinary Research Program, The George Washington University. July 1, 2017 – June 30, 2018. $35,756.

- Exploratory study to identify impacts of immigration policy changes on US Latino parents.

Past:

Co-Investigator: “Evaluation of the D.C. Healthy Schools Act of 2010”(Subcontract PI: O.A. Price). Response to RQ883706, Office of the State Superintendent of Education. October 1, 2015 – September 30, 2016. $81,402.

To evaluate the D.C. Healthy Schools Act of 2010.

Principal Investigator: “Acculturation-Related Parenting Risks for Latino Adolescent Substance Use,” Springboard Grants Program, Milken Institute School of Public Health, The George Washington University. July 1, 2014 – June 30, 2015. $50,000.

Pilot study used to inform R01 proposal development for application to NIDA, October 2015.

Co-Investigator “Prevention at Home: A Model for Novel use of Mobile Technologies and Integrated Care Systems to Improve HIV Prevention and Care While Lowering Cost,” Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services. PI: F. Speilberg. September 1, 2014 – December 31, 2015. $23,808,617.

To utilize mobile technologies and optimize the prevention and care continuum for HIV+ individuals in Washington D.C.

Co-Investigator: “Prince Georges County School Health Needs Assessment.” Prince Georges County Public Schools. June 1, 2014 – August 31, 2014. PI: O. Price. $24,999.

Identify health problems and health care needs of students and staff in Prince Georges county public schools with the aim of improving school health services.

Co-Investigator: “Managing Chronic Stress in Urban Minority Youth.” American Public Health Association. June 1, 2014 – September 30, 2014. PI: O. Price. $25,000.

Phase I of project to assist school-based health center providers in more effectively helping low-income, urban minority youth cope with chronic and multiple daily stressors in an effort to prevent school dropout. This pilot phase of the project will inform Phase II, which will follow to expand the scope of work.

Principal Investigator: “Acculturation and youth's longitudinal adjustment in Mexican-American families,” HRSA 09-001 (MCH Research Program, Secondary Analysis). Maternal and Child Health Bureau. February 1, 2010 – January 31, 2012. $100,000

Examines acculturation effects on adolescent mental health and school attainment for 749 Mexican-origin youth of immigrant parents followed over three time points in adolescence and young adulthood. Using SEM techniques, the study identified 1) bicultural orientations in multiple acculturation domains and 2) effects of a parent-youth acculturation gap on parent-youth conflict and youth adjustment. Data derive from the Children of Immigrants Longitudinal Study.

Principal Investigator: “The Latino Youth and Family Study,” Georgia State University Research Initiation Grant. July 1, 2011 – June 31, 2012. $10,000.

In this mixed-methods pilot study, focus groups are being conducted with Latino/a immigrant parents and adolescents to explore themes pertinent to parent-adolescent relationships and parenting with respect to developmental transitions through adolescence. Subsequent to these, school-based surveys with 120 adolescents and 30 parents of youth are being used to test psychometric properties of parenting measures that have been adapted to be culturally appropriate for Atlanta’s immigrant Latino population. Findings will inform proposal development on the topic of Latino adolescent health and well being.

Co-Investigator: “Cultural and contextual variability in parenting impacts on adolescent adjustment”(P.I.: L. Franzini). HRSA 09—001 (MCH Research Program). Maternal and Child Health Bureau. February 1, 2009 – January 31, 2012. $810,000.

Drawing from theoretical frameworks specific to the development of ethnic minority youth and to neighborhood effects, the present study aims to identify universal, context-specific, and culture-specific parenting values, practices and styles associated with health trajectories from early to late adolescence among low-income, urban Latino and African American youth. The study builds on Healthy Passages, a cohort study of 5th graders living in an urban Southwestern city who were interviewed in 5th and 7th grades. The proposed study will collect data in 10th grade to test hypotheses regarding multi-level pathways to adolescent depressive symptoms, school engagement, and delinquent behaviors.

Co-Principal Investigator: "How parenting modifies neighborhood risks related to low-income children's health," (P.I: T. Leventhal). Maternal and Child Health Bureau, January 1, 2007 – December 31, 2007 $100,000.

Multi-level analyses of three time points of data on over 2,000 low-income participants in "Welfare, Children and Families: A Three City Study" will explore modifying influences of parenting on associations between neighborhood context and child health and health-related behaviors. Developmental variations in these associations from early childhood to late adolescence will be considered.

Co-Principal Investigator: "Parental influences on adolescent sexual risk," (PI: R. Blum). Office of Population Affairs, April 1, 2005 – March 31, 2007, $357,584

Using data from "The National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health," and "Welfare, Children and Families: A Three City Study" this proposed study examines direct and indirect effects of family social processes on youths' sexual risk behaviors from early adolescence into emerging adulthood.

Principal Investigator: "The experience of parenting within a Central American immigrant community," Faculty Development Award, Department of Population and Family Health Sciences, Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health, December 1, 2005 – December 31, 2006, $20,000.

Through the development of partnerships with community-based organizations, qualitative data from 30 in-depth interviews and two follow-up focus groups with mothers of young Central American immigrant adolescents will be collected and analyzed. The study aims to understand the experience of parenting among Central American immigrant mothers living in a low-income immigrant community.

Co-Investigator: "Neighborhood and Family Effects on Adolescent Health Behaviors" (P.I.: C. Alexander), Maternal and Child Health Bureau, 08/30/98 – 07/31/02, $443,670.

To understand how neighborhood and family social contexts influence adolescent delinquency, aggression, and early sex initiation. The study includes an analysis of national data (The National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health) and the collection and analysis of qualitative and quantitative data on families living in three Baltimore City neighborhoods with varying rates of juvenile arrests for violent crimes.

Principal Investigator: Johns Hopkins Center for Adolescent Health Development Award, "Neighborhood characteristics and social capital: Influences on the association between parenting and fighting and delinquency among adolescent males," 1997 – 1998, $10,000.

Using data from the National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health, this study examined how neighborhood attributes and social capital modified associations between parenting and delinquency and aggression among adolescent males.

Principal Investigator: Doctoral Dissertation Grant, Johns Hopkins University Center for Injury Research and Policy, 1997 – 1998

Principal Investigator: Doctoral Training Fellowship, Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health, Department of Maternal and Child Health, 1994 – 1998

Honors and Awards

ABSTRACT

Purpose: U.S. Latino parents of adolescents face unprecedented threats to family stability and well-being due to rapid and far-reaching transformations in U.S. immigration policy.

Methods: Two hundred thirteen Latino parents of adolescents were recruited from community settings in a suburb of a large mid-Atlantic city to complete surveys assessing parents' psychological distress and responses to immigration actions and news. Univariate and bivariate analyses were conducted to describe the prevalence of parents' responses to immigration news and actions across diverse residency statuses. Multiple logistic regression models examined associations between immigration-related impacts and the odds of a parent's high psychological distress.

Results: Permanent residents, temporary protected status, and undocumented parents reported significantly more negative immigration impacts on psychological states than U.S. citizens. Parents reporting frequent negative immigration-related impacts had a significantly higher likelihood of high psychological distress than did other parents, and these associations were maintained even when accounting for parents' residency status, gender, education, and experience with deportation or detention. The odds of a parent reporting high psychological distress due to negative immigration impacts ranged from 2.2 ($p < .05$) to 10.4 ($p < .001$).

Conclusions: This is one of the first empirical accounts of how recent immigration policy changes and news have impacted the lives of Latino families raising adolescent children. Harmful impacts were manifest across a range of parent concerns and behaviors and are strong correlates of psychological distress. Findings suggest a need to consider pathways to citizenship for Latina/o parents so that these parents, many of whom are legal residents, may effectively care for their children.

IMPLICATIONS AND CONTRIBUTION

In response to rapid and unprecedented changes in immigration actions and news, high proportions of U.S. Latino parents of adolescents reported recently having modified behaviors and experiencing worry. Adverse responses to immigration events were associated with more than 300% greater odds of a U.S. Latino parent's high psychological distress.

Media reports indicate that U.S. Latina/o immigrants have experienced heightened stress and threats to family stability since the new President took office in 2017 [1,2]. However, little empirical data document how rapid changes in immigration news and actions are affecting Latina/o (hereafter, referred to as Latino) families. Adverse consequences of today's immigration climate may be pronounced for Latino parents with adolescent children. Compared with younger children, adolescents have a better cognitive understanding of the stressors their families face, experience more direct exposure to extrafamilial risks, and have spent more formative years of identity development within a U.S. context [3]. The present study describes parents' behavioral and emotional responses to recent immigration actions and news and investigates how these responses are associated with Latino parents' psychological distress. We describe how immigration-related impacts vary by residency status, conceptualized along a hierarchy from the most to least secure categories [4]. Participants included those who were U.S.-born and naturalized U.S. citizens (most secure), permanent residents, Temporary Protected Status (TPS)¹ residents, and undocumented residents (least secure).

Extensive research has described stressors experienced by U.S. Latinos [5,6], particularly the undocumented [7–14]. Latino immigrants often experience fear of deportation, exploitation by employers [8], trauma [15], distrust in public services [16], language barriers, racism [11], and financial strain [17]. These stressors are important predictors of psychological distress, indicated by anxiety, depression, and somatization [12,18,19]. The costs and burdens of psychological distress extend far beyond an affected individual. Parents' psychological distress is especially important; adolescents whose parents are depressed and/or anxious face heightened risk of poor social functioning [20], academic failure [21], and mental health problems [20].

Immigration threats have impacts well beyond the acute harm conferred to the subset of Latinos directly experiencing events such as deportation [13,22]. Informed by public health's injury pyramid, Dreby suggested that an event such as deportation severely hurts those at the top of the pyramid—Latinos experiencing deportation—but also produces less severe harm for a large number of Latinos at the bottom of the pyramid—those not directly experiencing deportation [23]. This is because politics, threats of deportation, and anti-immigrant sentiments lead to widespread fear and anxiety among Latinos not directly affected by the event [10,23,24].

Immigration actions and news likely are affecting Latino parents across diverse residency statuses. The most notable immigration policy changes in 2017 were: (1) expanded eligibility for deportation, which increased deportation of long-term residents without criminal records [25]; (2) the elimination of, and/or plans to eliminate, TPS [26–28]; and (3) an end to the Deferred

Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program, which has protected hundreds of thousands of undocumented Latinos brought to the United States as children [29]. Our study provides some of the first evidence to date indicating how U.S. Latino parents of adolescents cope, react, and manage emotions in response to recent immigration news and actions. Given that the adolescents of parents in this study were U.S. citizens or brought to the United States as children, our research can advance knowledge about the family context for a large and critical segment of the U.S. population.

Methods

Procedures and sample

Drawing from a mixed-method study conducted in the fall of 2017, we analyzed survey data for 213 Latina/o immigrant parents living in a suburban area of a large mid-Atlantic city in the United States. Numerous immigration policy changes took place before, during, and immediately after our collection.² The community includes a large Latino population, mostly from El Salvador and Guatemala and, to a lesser extent, from Mexico, Honduras, Nicaragua, and the Dominican Republic. An author of this study with expertise in data collection among this community utilized her existing network to recruit participants. Survey-only respondents were provided $10 and those who also participated in the focus group were provided $50. Eligibility was limited to Latino parents with at least one child aged 12–18 years. The sample was stratified so that about one-third were undocumented ($n = 69$), one-third were permanent residents ($n = 70$), and the remaining one-third included the same number of U.S. citizen ($n = 37$) and TPS parents ($n = 37$).

Data collection was conducted in Spanish by bicultural and bilingual interviewers. To protect participants' safety, we collected data anonymously, obtained oral consent only, and obtained a Certificate of Confidentiality from the National Institutes of Health. All study procedures were approved by the Institutional Review Board at the institution where the research was conducted.

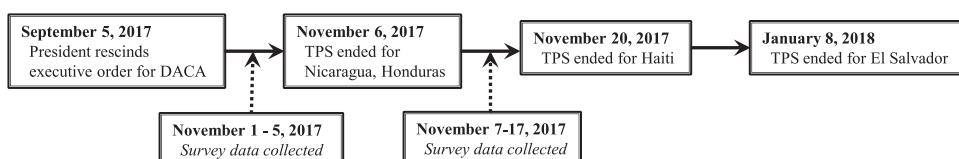

Measures

Residency status. Parents' residency status was measured by four dummy coded variables for U.S. citizen (the reference group), permanent resident, TPS, and undocumented.

Immigration impacts on parents. The 15-item Political Climate Scale was used to assess impacts of immigration news and actions [30]. The instrument opens with: "As you know, there have been stories in the news about immigrants and immigration, and there have been official actions affecting immigrants and other people. We would like to know whether these news stories and official actions have affected you or your family over the past few months." Parents responded to 15 statements indicating worry or behavior modification. The original 1 to 5 response options were recorded into "never/almost never, not very often, or sometimes" (the reference group) versus "very often or always/almost always."

¹ TPS residents refer to those granted permission to live in the United States due to extraordinary and temporary conditions in the country of origin [26].

² Timeline of survey data collection and policy announcements:

Parent's psychological distress. A modified 16-item version of the Brief Symptom Inventory-18 [31] was used to assess parents' symptoms of depression, anxiety, and somatization (due to Institutional Review Board concerns, two items—suicidal thoughts and chest pains—were removed). Parents reported being distressed or bothered in the past seven days by things such as feeling worthless, lonely, and nervous (0 = "not at all" to 4 = "extremely"). Results from Principal Components Analysis indicated a single factor of psychological distress ($\alpha=.96$). We recoded the summed average scores into a dichotomous variable, whereby, "high distress" represented the top quartile of scores (≥ 3.19).

Background variables. Parent characteristics included sex (female was the referent); having at least a high school education (less than high school was the referent); living in the United States for more than 15 years (<15 was the referent); and being from El Salvador (referent group), Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, United States, or "Other." We assessed if parents moved to the United States for any of the following reasons: (1) get a better job or make more money; (2) improve education for their child; (3) escape gangs or violence; and/or (4) reunite with family in the United States. Finally, we assessed whether or not the parent had a family member who was deported or detained since the new U.S. President took office in January 2017.

Analyses. We ran cross-tabulations with chi-square tests to examine residency status differences in background variables and impacts of immigration actions and news. We then ran logistic regression models whereby parents' psychological distress was regressed on variables measuring impacts of immigration actions and news. We excluded background measures that bivariate results suggested might pose a multicollinearity problem. We report regression coefficients as unadjusted odds ratios and adjusted odds ratios (AORs), with 95% confidence intervals (CIs). In post hoc analyses, we used two-way interaction terms to examine the degree to which immigration-related impacts on psychological distress differed for Latino parents in marginalized residency status groups (i.e., undocumented, TPS) versus others (i.e., U.S. citizens, permanent residents). All analyses used two-tailed statistical tests.

Results

Participants included slightly more mothers than fathers. About half of the parents were El Salvadoran, with the remainder including mostly Central Americans and a small number of Mexicans and U.S.-born parents. As shown in Table 1, virtually all TPS and U.S. citizen parents had lived in the United States for more than 15 years, compared with less than two-thirds of permanent resident and less than one-third of undocumented parents. Over three-quarters of U.S. citizens had at least a high school degree, compared with 40% to 50% of permanent resident and undocumented parents, and less than one-fifth of TPS parents. Although 60% of TPS parents reported that a family member had been detained or deported since the new president took office in 2017, less than a quarter of undocumented, permanent resident, and U.S. Citizen parents reported a family member's recent deportation or detention. Finally, the majority of youth whose parents are in this study are U.S. citizens; just 30% of the non-U.S. citizen parents report having a "DACA-eligible" child—one brought to the United States prior to age 18 and lacking legal residency status.

Just over 40% of TPS parents moved to the United States in order for the parent or spouse to improve their employment situation, compared with less than a fifth of permanent resident and undocumented parents. In addition, over 40% of permanent residents moved to reunite with family in the United States, compared with about a quarter of TPS and undocumented parents. Over half of the non-U.S. citizen parents (i.e., TPS, undocumented, permanent residents) moved to the United States to escape gangs or violence and almost 40% did so for their children to get a better education. Finally, almost half of TPS parents (48.6%) reported high psychological distress, compared with about a quarter of undocumented (23.2%) and permanent resident (27.1%) parents and just 8.1% of U.S. citizen parents.

Variations in immigration impacts by parents' residency status

Table 2 presents results for parental responses to immigration actions and news. As shown, the majority of TPS and undocumented parents reported that immigration news and actions led them to very often or always (1) worry about family separation; (2) feel their child had been negatively affected; and (3) worry it would be hard for their child to finish school. Although TPS parents were more likely than other groups to report concerns about the safety and well-being of the family and children, substantial proportions of undocumented and permanent resident parents reported these same concerns. Specifically, a substantial proportion of TPS, undocumented, and permanent resident parents reported having frequently (1) warned their children to stay away from authorities; (2) talked to their children about changing behaviors such as where they hang out; (3) avoided seeking medical care, public assistance (e.g., Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, The Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children), or help from the police; and (4) felt that their child or themselves had been negatively affected by immigration actions and news. Undocumented parents were most likely to report jobs concerns including (1) having a hard time imagining they could get a job or keep a job;

(2) believing it would be hard to get a better job or make more money; and (3) worrying that it would be hard for their children to get a job. There were no significant differences in the proportions of TPS, undocumented, and permanent residents who reported frequently changing daily routines or worrying about contact with authorities such as police.

Due to small cell sizes, we do not present results for the most extreme immigration consequences; these responses did not differ significantly by residency status. Overall, between 14% and 18% of parents reported "very often" or "almost always/always" being stopped, questioned or harassed, and/or considered leaving the country. U.S. citizens were least likely to report all other adverse immigration impacts.

How immigration impacts matter for parents' psychological distress

A parent's odds of being highly psychological distressed were significantly greater if the parent frequently modified behavior in response to immigration actions and news. Results in Table 3 include unadjusted odds ratios as well as adjusted odds ratios. The odds of a parent's high psychological distress were 118% greater for parents who frequently avoided contact with authorities such as the police (44.3% vs. 19.2%, AOR = 2.18, CI: 1.03–4.60) and three to four times greater for parents who frequently warned their child to stay away from authorities (43.6% vs. 9.9%, AOR = 4.06, CI: 1.75–9.45); worried it would be hard for their child to get a job (40.8% vs. 14.0%, AOR = 3.19, CI: 1.49–6.81); worried that family members would get separated (35% vs. 9.6%, AOR = 3.52, CI: 1.28–9.67); and considered leaving the United States (51.4% vs. 20.6%, AOR = 4.13, CI: 1.71–9.96). The odds of high psychological distress were 8–11 times higher when parents reported that, due to immigration actions and news, they had frequently been stopped, questioned or harassed (60.0% vs. 21.0%, AOR = 8.03, CI: 2.68–24.05); avoided seeking medical care or assistance from police and government services (48.8% vs. 11.6%, AOR = 5.30, CI: 2.45–11.47); talked to their child about changing behaviors such as where the child hangs out (49.0% vs. 6.2%, AOR = 8.74, CI: 3.42–22.39); felt negatively affected (49.5% vs. 7.8%, AOR = 7.78, CI: 3.33–18.20); believed that their children had been

Once control variables were included, parent reports of having changed daily routines, feeling it was harder to find or keep a job and having a hard time imagining getting a better job or making more money, were not associated with parents' psychological distress.³

Discussion

Contemporary immigration actions and news have had profound and far-reaching adverse impacts on U.S. Latino parents raising adolescents. In a departure from prior research [8,19], this descriptive study is informative about Latino parents across a hierarchy of residency statuses. Although parental worries and behavior modifications tied to immigration actions and news were least prevalent among U.S. citizens, pernicious immigration-related consequences were by no means limited to the undocumented. Across noncitizen groups, especially those with TPS, parents experienced concern for family, as indicated by parents warning their children to avoid authorities; avoiding medical care, public assistance, or the police; and, worrying that their children had been negatively affected at school due to immigration actions and news. Similarly high proportions of TPS and undocumented parents had frequently talked to their children about changing behaviors such as where they hang out, felt that the immigration actions and news negatively affected the parent, and worried about their own and their children's job prospects. As suggested by research on DACA recipients [15], the vulnerability of TPS parents in this study may stem from the temporary nature of the TPS program and/or the stress of having undocumented family members [26,32]. Almost all TPS parents in this study has lived in the United States for more than 15 years, and 60% had experienced a family member's deportation or detention during the first nine months of the new president's term in office. Taken together, these findings highlight the pronounced vulnerability of TPS parents vis-à-vis today's immigration changes.

Evidence for adverse consequences of immigration actions and news across residency statuses is consistent with research indicating that immigration policy can be equally harmful to documented and undocumented Latinos [23,32]. TPS and, in some cases, permanent resident parents were at least as harmed by immigration events as were undocumented parents. In this way, our findings do not support the idea of "hierarchy" of residency status but rather point to the uniquely protective value of having U.S. citizenship. A substantial proportion of non-U.S. citizen parents frequently engaged in behaviors designed to avoid the attention of government authorities. These parental responses align with prior research indicating that Latino immigrants often hesitate contacting police for fear of mistreatment and/or the deportation of another family member [33]. Given that over half of the non-U.S. citizen parents in this study moved to the United States to escape gangs and violence, unease among these parents is especially understandable. Regardless of residency status, a small proportion of Latino parents (approximately 15% to 18%) reported "very often" or "always" considering leaving the United States and/or getting stopped, harassed, or questioned. These findings support the conclusion drawn by Enriquez that "sanctions intended for undocumented immigrants seeped into the lives of individuals who should have been protected by their citizenship status."

Adverse immigration impacts were associated with at least a 300% increase in the odds of a parent having high psychological distress. Worrying about youth's education, perceiving negative impacts on the family, being stopped/questioned/harassed, and considering leaving the United States appeared to be especially harmful; frequently experiencing these outcomes was associated with more than an eight-fold increase in the odds of a parent's high psychological distress. Unlike parental concerns about their family, parent aspirations for their own upward mobility (e.g., hoping to get a better job or make more money) appeared not to compromise parents' mental health once accounting for background variables.

³ Post hoc analyses indicated that just three of 15 two-way interaction terms between residency status and immigration impacts were statistically significant (all suggested stronger immigration impacts on psychological distress for U.S. citizen and permanent resident than for TPS and undocumented parents). Given concerns about a Type I error, we concluded that associations between immigration-related impacts and the odds of parents having high psychological distress were similar for Latino parents specifically targeted by official immigration actions and those not specifically targeted.

Regardless of societal concerns about the mental health and well-being of Latino adults, our findings raise serious concerns about the health and well-being of U.S. Latino adolescents. Adolescents whose parents get deported often experience post-traumatic stress disorder [9]. In this research, almost two-thirds of parents frequently worried about family separation and close to half frequently warned their adolescent children to stay away from authorities, talked to their children about changing behaviors such as where they hang out, and avoided access to medical care, police, and public assistance. These behaviors directly threaten youth's safety and mental and physical health and can be indirectly harmful by way of parents' psychological distress [34]. Although risks likely are magnified for adolescents whose parents are not U.S. citizens, the vast majority of Latino adolescents in this study were U.S. citizens. Thus, even though Latino youth themselves are not undocumented, they face risks to well-being on account of their parents' vulnerable residency status [35].

This study is not without limitations and suggests important directions for future research. First, this study's use of cross-sectional data limits causal inferences. Second, the reliance on self-reported data for a convenience sample of Latinos from a single immigrant community is limiting. A larger sample size would help elucidate findings for TPS parents, a group at heightened risk for adverse outcomes. Given that many Latino parents, may live in "mixed-status" families with documented and undocumented family members, it will be important for future research to explicitly investigate the unique difficulties faced by mixed-status families [36]. Third, given the small number of parents with children covered by the DACA program in this study, further research is needed to elucidate the degree to which DACA protections may or may not shield parents from immigration-related concerns and worries. Fourth, it is unclear how parental responses to today's immigration actions and news might differ from those experienced during the Obama administration, which witnessed even higher numbers of deportations to Mexico and Central America. In this regard, however, any comparison is complicated by the fact that President Trump's election in 2016 was followed by fewer attempted illegal crossings into the United States, an increased number of deportations in the interior of the country, and expanded eligibility for deportation, resulting in more deportations of individuals with long histories of law-abiding behavior [37]. Finally, our study did not investigate Latino parents' experiences of racism and discrimination. Yet, stress tied to discrimination experiences are highly prevalent among Latino immigrants and positively associated with anti-immigrant policies [38] and inequity due to residency status [11]. Given that parents' reports of being frequently stopped, questioned, or harassed due to immigration actions and news did not differ by residency status, it is possible that immigration changes increased racial profiling for a much larger segment of the U.S. Latino population than has been targeted by official immigrant actions.

Public discourse around immigration has progressed at a rapid pace since the 2016 presidential campaign and election. Extant research has demonstrated that residency status serves as a mechanism of social stratification affecting Latino citizen youth by blocking access to critical developmental resources [39]. The current study suggests that increased anti-immigrant and anti-Latino rhetoric taking place [1,2] may lead to psychological distress among Latino parents of adolescents—a finding that generalized to all four residency status groups. Community-based organizations must educate Latino residents about their rights, ensure that these rights are not violated, and counteract rumors that can have a chilling effect on Latino families' use of public services. Given robust negative implications of parent psychological distress for adolescents [20,21], alongside the large portion of Latino adolescents who are U.S. citizens, pathways to citizenship for Latino parents are critical in order to mitigate long-term, collateral consequences for numerous Americans.

Exhibit C

Statement of the Evidence

JUNE 20, 2018

The Science is Clear: Separating Families has Long-term Damaging Psychological and Health Consequences for Children, Families, and Communities

After the United States Department of Justice announced the “Zero Tolerance Policy for Criminal Illegal Entry,” Immigration and Custom Enforcement (ICE — an arm of the Department of Homeland Security) separated approximately 2,000 children from their parents in April and May 2018 as they approached the U.S. border. Children and parents were placed in separate facilities as they were being processed and were not told when or how they would be reunited. This policy and its consequences have raised significant concerns among researchers, child welfare advocates, policy makers, and the public, given the overwhelming scientific evidence that separation between children and parents, except in cases where there is evidence of maltreatment, is harmful to the development of children, families, and communities. Family separations occurring in the presence of other stressors, such as detention or natural disaster, only adds to their negative effects.

Evidence on Harmful Effects of Parent-Child Separation

The evidence that family separation is harmful dates back to studies on the effects of parent-child separations on children’s well-being during World War II. This research documented far reaching effects of these separations into adulthood, including increased risk for mental health problems, poor social functioning, insecure attachment, disrupted stress reactivity, and mortality (Pesonen & Räikkönen, 2012; Rusby & Tasker, 2009; Mitrani, Santisteban, & Muir, 2004). Other research similarly documents the harmful effects of parental separation on child well-being in a variety of other child populations including children in Romanian orphanages (Zeanah, Nelson, Fox, et al., 2003), children in foster care (Flannery, Beauchamp, & Fisher, 2017) and children of incarcerated parents (Geller, Garfinkel, Cooper & Mincy, 2009; Miller, 2006). More recent work has documented the increased mental health risk faced by both parents and children when they are separated in the immigration process (Suarez-Orozco, Bang, & Kim., 2011; Rusch & Reyes, 2013). Parent-child separation has long-term effects on child well-being, even if there is subsequent reunification. After being separated, reunited children can experience difficulty with emotional attachment to their parents, self-esteem, and physical and psychological health (Smith, Lalonde, & Johnson, 2004; Gubernskaya & Debry, 2017). For some children, time does not appear to fully heal these psychological wounds (Shonkoff et al., 2012).

Parents Buffer Children from Adverse Effects of Toxic Stress

Parental separation is considered a toxic stressor, an experience that engages strong and prolonged activation of the body’s stress-management system (Bridgman, 2014). The physiological and psychological toll of early life stress, including parental separation, changes how the body responds to stress in the long term, disrupting higher-order cognitive and affective processes as well as negatively altering brain structures and functioning (Lupien, McEwen, Gunnar, & Heim, 2009; Pechtel & Pizzagalli, 2011; Kumar et al., 2014). Such stressors put children at greater risk for a multitude of health and psychological impairments, including anxiety, depression, post-traumatic stress disorder, lower IQ, obesity, immune system functioning, physical growth, cancer, heart and lung disease, stroke, and morbidity (Granqvist, Sroufe, Dozier, Hesse, & Steele, 2017; Heim & Nemeroff, 2001; Maniam, Antoniadis, & Morris, 2014; Pechtel & Pizzagalli, 2011; Shirtcliff, Coe, & Pollak, 2009; Taylor, 2010).

Children depend on their primary caretakers to successfully navigate stressful and traumatic events. Children's physiological responses to stress can be significantly reduced by access to their primary caretaker (Hostinar, Sullivan, & Gunnar, 2013). The separation of the family unit under extreme conditions of stress worsens the psychological and physiological ramifications of that stressor on children, especially younger children (Masten & Narayan, 2012). Conversely, ongoing contact with primary caregivers under conditions of stress can protect against risk (Rodriguez & Margolin, 2015).

Child-Separation from Parents Impacts Children at All Ages

Much of the research on family separation has focused on the impacts on children early in development. However, puberty is also an especially vulnerable time of rapid change (Doom & Gunnar, 2013). Stressors during adolescence can have lasting impacts — the effects of which may not become evident until adulthood — (Humphreys, Gleason, Drury, et al., 2015; Lupien, McEwen, Gunnar, & Heim, 2009). Further, the effects of traumatic experiences are cumulative; children and adolescents who have already faced previous adversity are particularly susceptible to long term further negative consequences (Brown, Anda, & Tiemeier, et al, 2009; MacKenzie, Bosk, & Zeanah, 2017). Thus, the research shows that across infancy, childhood, and adolescence, child-family separations can be related to negative outcomes across the lifespan.

Impact of Border Family Separations on U.S. Citizens

There is also evidence that family separations harm U.S. citizens whose family members experience border detention or deportation. Parental separation increases the risk for these U.S. children's mental health problems such as anxiety, depression, behavior problems, and symptoms of post-traumatic stress disorder (Allen, Cisneros, & Tellez, 2015; Rojas-Flores, Clements, Hwang Koo, & London, 2017; Zayas, Aguilar-Gaxiola, Yoon, & Rey, 2015). U.S. citizens of Latino descent also report heightened worries and concerns for their families and their communities as a result of changes in implementation of immigration policies such as the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) policy (Roche, Vaquera, White, & Rivera, 2018). Moreover, countries with supportive integration policies are more likely to have child populations with better overall health and mental health indicators than those with less supportive approaches (Marks, McKenna, & Garcia Coll, 2018). Thus, there is evidence that policies about parental separations can negatively affect American citizens.

The Policy Implications are Clear

The scientific evidence is conclusive. Parent-child separations lead to a host of long-term psychological, social, and health problems that are not necessarily resolved upon reunification. In particular, the disruption of biological stress regulation mechanisms in the body induced by the need to seek refugee or asylum status are further taxed by the absence of parental support. The science is clear: policies that separate immigrant families upon entry to the U.S. have devastating and long-term developmental consequences for children and their families.

Plaintiff,

DECLARATION OF PIA

et al.,

Defendants.

I, Pia Escudero, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of the matters contained within this Declaration. If I am called upon to testify as to the statements made herein, I could and would competently testify hereto.

2. I am a national mental health leader and social work professional with nearly 30 years working as a psychiatric social worker. For the past 10 years, I have served as the director of the School Mental Health and Crisis Counseling & Intervention Services, within the Student Health and Human Services Division of the Los Angeles Unified School District (“LAUSD” or “District”).

3. As the director of the School Mental Health and Crisis Counseling & Intervention Services, I oversee and manage School Mental Health professionals and services

1 that promote the mental health, well-being and academic achievement of all LAUSD students.
 2 LAUSD programs support positive student connections with peers, family, school and 3 community to facilitate student development and academic success. They also facilitate the 4 ability to successfully deal with problems, crises, or traumatic experiences. For the past 20
 5 years, I have collaborated with research partners at UCLA, USC and RAND Corporation to 6 develop cutting edge, evidence-based practices for individuals, groups, and classrooms to treat
 7 youth exposed to violence and traumatic events.

8 4. As the nation's second largest school district, LAUSD is proud to bring together 9 students and families from diverse backgrounds and cultures, many of whom are immigrants.
 10 In fact, members of our school communities speak 94 languages other than English, including 11 Spanish, Armenian, Korean, Tagalog, Cantonese, and Arabic.

12 5. As determined by the California Supreme Court in Serrano v. Priest, LAUSD
 13 believes education is a fundamental right for all children. LAUSD has been on the forefront of 14 ensuring that all students, regardless of immigration status, are afforded a free public education 15 aligned with the United States Supreme Court case of Plyler v. Doe, which held that 16 undocumented children have a constitutional right to receive a free public K-12 education that 17 provides the means to becoming a "self-reliant and self-sufficient participant in society" 18 and instills the "fundamental values necessary to the maintenance of a democratic political 19 system."

20 6. LAUSD has long welcomed immigrant students and provided comprehensive 21 academic, health, and social-emotional supports so they can learn and achieve their academic 22 potential. The District's School Mental Health department, first established in 1933, today 23 employs over 400 psychiatric social workers, psychiatrists, and support staff, who partner with 24 educational professionals to address barriers that prevent students from learning to optimize 25 their academic achievement.

26 7. School Mental Health provides services throughout the district, using an

1 integrated and comprehensive approach that employs (1) universal, (2) targeted, and (3)
 2 intensive remedies. Universal strategies are aimed at all school stakeholders and include 3 teacher and parent training in mental health awareness, psychological first aid, and the 4 promotion of resiliency and nonviolence among students school wide and in the classrooms.
 5 Targeted services are designed for early intervention for at-risk students. LAUSD also operates 6 15 Wellness Centers and 7 Mental Health Clinics that provide intensive therapeutic services to 7 individuals, groups, and families. These programs emphasize evidence-based, trauma-specific 8 interventions to address significant mental, emotional, and behavioral disorders.

9 8. The forcible separation of immigrant children from their parents is traumatic 10 and cruel, and runs counter to our ethical standards, societal norms, and national aspirations.
 11 Studies have demonstrated that such trauma can cause irreparable harm: trauma can literally 12 rearrange the brain's wiring, affecting areas dedicated to pleasure, engagement, control, and 13 trust.¹

14 9. In my experience, a system that induces trauma to children and other vulnerable 15 populations inevitably incurs additional and costly services to repair the cognitive and 16 emotional damage it has caused. Based on news reports, I have learned about the federal 17 government's recent practice of separating migrant families, which has led to a population of 18 over 2,000 separated children. The trauma endured by these children requires access to 19 necessary mental health services. Studies show that forced separation from parents in these 20 circumstances negatively impacts the educational outcomes of students, causing increased 21 anxiety and withdrawal, inability to focus on learning, and fear of being left alone.² If any of the children separated from their families enters LAUSD, s/he will have access to LAUSD's mental health services.

10. Children need their parents and other caregivers to thrive in school. In my experience, children who endure trauma, such as family separation, have a much more difficult time in school and require more mental health services to alleviate trauma and psychological damage.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct.

OMH operates psychiatric centers across the State of New York, and regulates, certifies and oversees more than 4,500 programs which are operated by local governments and nonprofit agencies ("Providers") (www.omh.ny.gov/omhweb/planning/docs/507-plan.pdf). These programs include various

1 inpatient and outpatient programs, emergency, community support, residential and family care
 2 programs. The mission of OMH is to promote the mental health of all who reside in New York
 3 State, with a particular focus on providing recovery for adults with serious mental illness and 4 children with serious mental disturbances.

5 4. OMH receives its funding, in the approximate amount of $3.97 billion annually
 6 (<https://www.omh.ny.gov/omhweb/budget/16-17-eb/pdf>), from the State of New York. Each 7 year, the entirety of OMH's budget is allocated toward supporting programs and services that 8 are designed to address the needs of adults and children in the State of New York with mental 9 illness or who are otherwise in need of mental health services. OMH expends extensive resources
 10 to offer a broad array of community services, programs and activities that assist residents of New 11 York State and that are intended to prevent or reduce the disabling effects of mental illness.
 12 OMH considers the mental health needs of all populations Statewide in allocating the resources 13 it receives from the New York State budget, regardless of citizenship status.

14 5. OMH is currently organized into various divisions responsible for mental health 15 services in New York State. One of these is the Division of Integrated Community Services for 16 Children and Families.

17 6. As Associate Commissioner for the Division of Integrated Community Services
 18 for Children and Families, I am responsible for the oversight of a Statewide array of community 19 based mental health services for children and their families. Pursuant to my work with OMH in 20 this and prior positions, my prior professional experience, and my educational background, I am 21 familiar and knowledgeable about impacts on the mental health of children.

22 7. The disabling effects of mental illness in adults can result in homelessness, 23 joblessness, health problems, involvement with the criminal justice system, and social isolation.
 24 In children, these effects are often serious and long lasting, leading to poor academic 25 achievement, failure to complete high school, substance abuse, involvement with the correctional 26 system, lack of vocational success, inability to live independently, and health problems.

1 8. The first five years of life, especially, are critically important for both the child
 2 and family. Key to a young child's healthy growth and development are nurturing relationships
 3 between the family and child. OMH recognizes that secure parent and child attachment is critical 4 to healthy development, and that family relationships form the foundation of social and 5 emotional wellness for children and youth. Parent involvement in children's lives mitigates the 6 effects of stress and trauma.

7 9. Disruptions in the parent-child attachment are very problematic and have 8 significant mental health implications. Young children separated from their parents show 9 immediate signs of anxiety, depression, and disruptions in eating and sleeping patterns.

10 10. Parent-child separation creates more than momentary stress; it can have long-11 term detrimental effects on physical and emotional well-being. Some longer- term effects include
 12 Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, engagement in high-risk behaviors, problems with impulse 13 control, difficulty with learning and processing information, and challenges with forming and 14 maintaining healthy relationships. Studies with which I am familiar show that traumatic events 15 early in life play out in the form of physical and mental disease later in life, and prolonged, 16 chronic stress actually changes the structure of the brain, leading to poor outcomes for children.

17 11. In light of the above, OMH policies support family involvement in every aspect 18 of treatment. OMH's stance is that children belong with their family, and that even in instances
 19 of abuse and neglect, work should be done to engage the parents in therapeutic work to repair 20 relationships and increase safety. OMH also supports and encourages all OMH Providers to 21 adopt trauma informed programming, so as to create safe and nurturing environments for all 22 children and youth.

23 12. OMH is aware that children whom Defendants have separated from their parents
 24 and sent to New York are already suffering psychological trauma, as would be expected. As one 25 example, it has come to OMH's attention that an unaccompanied alien child ("UAC") from 26 South America who is less than ten years of age, and who has been residing in an Office of

1 Refugee Resettlement contracted provider agency group home located in New York since early
 2 June, was recently transported to and held overnight for observation at an OMH-licensed
 3 Comprehensive Psychiatric Emergency Program at a hospital in the community. The UAC
 4 became extremely distraught at being separated from the UAC's father at the USA/Mexican 5 border and verbalized wanting to jump out of a second story window. The UAC needed to be 6 restrained by group home staff as the UAC was running towards a balcony. It was reported that 7 no group home staff can speak the UAC's language (although the child can be understood to a 8 limited degree), that the child speaks no English, and that the child was depressive and had 9 recently begun exhibiting physically aggressive, impulsive and disruptive behavior in the group 10 home.

11 13. The longer UACs are separated from the parents the more exacerbated will be 12 such clear and evident psychological harm.

13 14. Not only are OMH and/or its Providers already providing mental health services 14 to UACs during the current separation period, but OMH and/or its Providers will likely be 15 administering or funding mental health services to some of these children not only for the 16 foreseeable future, but potentially for years, as many UACs are expected to permanently remain 17 in New York State.

18 15. As such, it is expected that the presence of UACs in New York State both 19 currently and in the future will require an allocation of the finite resources available for mental 20 health services Statewide, and may also impact waiting times for all those in need of certain 21 services.

22 16. For instance, eleven of OMH's psychiatric centers provide inpatient services to 23 youth and there are currently youth awaiting admission to these facilities. It is expected that with 24 potentially hundreds, and even thousands, of UAC's experiencing the trauma of family
 25 separation and the resulting social isolation, many more youth may be in need of inpatient 26 services at some point in the future.

1 17. In addition, OMH Providers operate 18 Residential Treatment Facilities for 2 Children, and OMH and/or its Providers operate 35 Community Residences for Children and 8
 3 Crisis Residences for Children (<https://my.omh.ny.gov/bi/pd/saw.dll?PortalPages>). Waitlists for 4 these different services vary by region, but will only increase with any increased need for such 5 services.

6 18. OMH is obligated by regulation to provide services in such a manner as to assure 7 that OMH facilities do not discriminate against a patient in terms of his or her race, color, sex,
 8 creed, religion, age or national origin. See 14 NYCRR 27.4. Citizenship status, or lack thereof, 9 does not affect OMH's obligation to provide mental health services to those residing in New 10 York State.

11 19. While certain types of programs offered by OMH Providers are solely 12 reimbursable by Medicaid, and therefore there would be no payment mechanism for those who 13 are undocumented, other programs, such as OMH operated Community or Crisis Residences, as 14 well as OMH's inpatient services, are solely state funded, which means that undocumented 15 persons present in New York State, such as an UAC, are provided such services regardless of 16 ability to pay at the ultimate expense of New York State and therefore its tax payers.

17 20. Beds in OMH operated Community Residences, OMH operated Crisis 18 Residences, and OMH inpatient facilities have significant financial costs to the State of New 19 York.

1 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of Washington and the
2 United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

CULLEY, CHILD ADVOCATE, IN

DECLARATION OF TANIA M. CULLEY, CHILD ADVOCATE, IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY
INJUNCTION

I, Tania M. Culley, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.
 2. I am the Child Advocate for the State of Delaware and lead the Office of the Child Advocate.
 3. This declaration is submitted in support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction.
 4. The Office of the Child Advocate is charged with safeguarding the welfare of the children of Delaware. 29 Del. C. § 9001A. In addition to providing policy and legislative advocacy on behalf of dependent, neglected and abused children, the Office of the Child Advocate is also charged with providing legal representation to each of those children who end up in the custody of the Department of Services for Children, Youth and Their Families.

5. In the State of Delaware, parents have the primary responsibility for meeting the needs of their children and the State has an obligation to help them discharge this responsibility. Delaware law explicitly declares that “the State has a basic obligation to promote family stability and preserve the family as a unit....” 29 Del. C. § 9001. Delaware law also recognizes that

1 preservation of the family as a unit is “fundamental to the maintenance of a stable, democratic 2 society.” 10 Del. C. § 902(a).

3 6. To that end, the state has directed its courts, when possible consistent with the 4 safety of family members, to ensure that homes “remain unbroken.” The express statutory child
5 welfare policy of the State is to “serve to advance the interests and secure the safety of the child,
6 while preserving the family unit whenever the safety of the child is not jeopardized.” 16 Del. C.
7 § 901. In order for the family unit to be disrupted, a child must be found to be dependent,
8 neglected or abused in the parent’s care, and it must be in the best interests of the child. 10 Del.
9 C. § 901; 13 Del. C., Ch. 23 and 25.

10 7. A complete injunction is necessary to protect the sovereignty of the State of 11 Delaware by protecting its obligation to assist families should separated children ultimately be 12 placed in Delaware, to assure that Delaware has authority over its facilities where children or 13 families may be placed, and to ensure its legal, education and healthcare systems have the 14 authority and resources to meet the needs of children and their families.

15 I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct based on 16 information and belief.

DECLARATION OF MARIA MATOS IN SUPPORT OF

Defendants.

DECLARATION OF MARIA MATOS IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

I, Maria Matos, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.

2. I am the President and CEO of the Delaware Latin American Community Center.

3. This declaration is submitted in support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary

Injunction.

4. The mission of the Latin American Community Center is “To empower the Latino Community through Education, advocacy, partnerships and exceptional service”.

5. The Hispanic population in Delaware is the 40th largest in the nation. About 83,000 Hispanics reside in Delaware, 0.2% of all Hispanics in the United States. Delaware's population is 9% Hispanic, the 27th largest Hispanic statewide population share nationally. Hispanic male and female population is spread evenly throughout Delaware. Median age of Latinos in Delaware is 24 years old.

6. The majority of Hispanic homes in Delaware are family led. There are 40,000 Hispanic eligible voters in Delaware—the 40th largest Hispanic statewide eligible voter population nationally. Georgetown stands by itself. Even though the largest Hispanic population in Delaware is Mexican, Georgetown in particular is Guatemalan.

7. Senate Bill 59, Delaware Driving Privilege Card, passed by the legislature in 2013 was developed by the Undocumented Motorist Safety and Insurance Task Force. Delaware

1 Hispanic Commission developed the Delaware Hispanic Public Policy Agenda, a blueprint for 2 the community.

3 8. The current policy of separating children from their families has our community
4 afraid of what is going to happen next. The chilling effect upon our Latino population accessing
5 justice/courts/family services, given the effect of the practices at the border states, have families
6 thinking that their children can be taken. They fear leaving the State or country because of 7 immigration and border policies, and the impact of these policies has added additional stress on 8 an already stressed community.

9 9. A complete injunction is necessary to eliminate the chilling effect on the exercise 10 of the fundamental rights of documented and undocumented immigrants presently residing in 11 the State of Delaware.

12 I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct based on

PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

DECLARATION OF JAVIER TORRIJOS IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

I, Javier Torrijos, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.
 2. I am the Chair of the Delaware Hispanic Commission.
 3. This declaration is submitted in support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction.

Injunction.

4. The mission of the Delaware Hispanic Commission is to expand and improve the representation of and advocacy for Delaware's Hispanic Community and to identify and address the most important needs of Delaware's rapidly growing Hispanic population. The Delaware Hispanic Commission is committed to enriching the lives of the Hispanic Community by enhancing and streamlining efforts to improve the delivery of services; bringing awareness of current issues to the state agencies; suggesting possible solutions for the agencies consideration; and keeping the Hispanic Community informed of available state assistance that exist for all Delaware residents. For more information about the Delaware Hispanic Commission visit our website at <http://hispanic.delaware.gov/>.

1 5. Attached please find the Power Point Presentation that was provided by the 2 Delaware Department of Economic Development Office dated June 2013 showing data on the 3 Hispanic demographics.

5 6. After the election of the POTUS in 2016 the Delaware Hispanic Commission in 6 2017 focused on community conversations to inform and make the community aware of their 7 civil rights. The rhetoric by the POTUS against the immigrant community raised fear and 8 concern over deportation and separation of families, children, and local police working with ICE, 9 discrimination, and violation of their civil rights. In one instance a mother brought to my 10 attention that her child who is an American citizen was harassed in school and told to go back to 11 their home country simply because the child looked Hispanic/Latino. The mother was deeply 12 upset about the matter and couldn't believe this type of bullying was happening at the school
13 where they are supposed to be free from discrimination and bullying. DHC engaged the 14 Delaware Department of Education to help the community understand their rights (anti-bullying 15 policy) and to report such matters in order to take the appropriate steps to protect their children.
16 DHC through the community conversation also informed the community that the Delaware State
17 Police and local law enforcement had not signed up for the 287G program and is not working 18 with ICE officials to identify and deport the undocumented person.

21 7. DHC was also very instrumental in helping pass legislations that allowed 22 individuals that are residents of the State of Delaware but didn't have legal status in the United 23 States of America to obtain the Driving Privilege Card (DPC). Many individuals in the State
24 have applied and has allowed them drive legally in the roadways of Delaware. However, since 25 the current White House administration came into office the DHC has heard from individuals
26 who refuse to apply for the DPC because they are afraid that ICE will obtain their information

1 from the DMV and submit it to ICE. Delaware law protects their information but they are still 2 fearful that the federal government will be able to override the State through the court system.
3 The actions of the current White House Administration has impacted the State of Delaware in 4 its business to have everyone legally registered to drive.

6 8. The current policy of separating children from their families has the community
7 afraid of what going to happen next. The chilling effect upon our Latino population accessing
8 justice/courts/family services given the effect of the practices at the border states; have families
9 thinking that their children can be taken, they fear leaving the State or country because of 10 immigration and border policies; the impact of these policies have added additional stress on an 11 already stressed community. An example of this chilling effect is from a very distressed 12 Hispanic/Latina business woman who was not paid for the cleaning service she provided for a 13 home construction developer. She cleaned the new homes for the developer before they would 14 be turned over to the buyer. The home developer agreed to pay her for the cleaning each of the 15 houses including his own. She told me that she was never compensated for her work totaling 16 over $40,000. Though she has a record for the proof of services (invoices, hours tracked, etc.)
17 she is afraid to officially submit to the Delaware Department of Labor because of the fear of 18 being report to ICE by the home developer. I have heard of similar cases like this where 19 individuals will not report to authorities abuses that they have experienced because of the reprisal 20 of being reported to ICE. Commission members have relayed many stories of this nature where 21 individuals are afraid to report or say anything for fear of retribution. They live in the shadows 22 hoping that ICE will not come and deport them.

23

24 9. A complete injunction is necessary to eliminate the chilling effect on the exercise
25 of the fundamental rights of documented and undocumented immigrants presently residing in 26 the State of Delaware.

1 I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct based on

DONALD TRUMP in his official capacity as President of the United States, et al.,

DECLARATION OF BARBARA C.
GUINN, EXECUTIVE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF THE NEW YORK STATE OFFICE OF TEMPORARY DISABILITY ASSISTANCE

Defendants.

I, Barbara C. Guinn, declare as follows:

I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.

2. I serve as the Executive Deputy Commissioner of the New York State Office of Temporary and Disability Assistance (“OTDA”). I am the principal assistant to the Commissioner of OTDA, advise on matters of policy, and co-manage the operations of the Office with the Commissioner.

3. The mission of OTDA is to help vulnerable New Yorkers meet their essential needs and advance economically by providing opportunities for stable employment, housing, and nutrition. The agency's vision is to empower New Yorkers to improve their financial security and household stability in support of strong families and communities.

4. OTDA was created by Chapter 436 of the Session Laws of New York for 1997 as the successor to the New York State Department of Social Services. Chapter 436 transferred

1 to OTDA the functions, powers duties, and obligations of the former Department of Social
 2 Services concerning public assistance programs, Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program
 3 (“SNAP”), the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program (“LIHEAP”), and services
 4 provided to refugees and other non-citizens.

5 5. OTDA administers a wide range of programs that provide services and support to 6 low-income families and individuals, including services for refugees and other non-citizens.
 7 OTDA administers many of these programs through social services districts, providing policy
 8 guidance and systems support to the districts in their implementation of OTDA programs, as 9 well as fiscal monitoring and quality assurance of district operations and adjudication of fair 10 hearings reviewing district determinations.

11 6. To the extent that children separated pursuant to the challenged policy would be 12 placed with sponsors in New York, they may be eligible to receive assistance or services through 13 one or more of the State or federally-funded programs described below, provided the children 14 have an appropriate immigration status and/or meet other program eligibility criteria. The 15 circumstances under which children who have been separated from their parents may qualify for 16 assistance or services is described more fully in the paragraphs below.

17 7. Article XVII of the Constitution of the State of New York states that “the aid, 18 care and support of the needy are public concerns and shall be provided by the state and by such 19 of its subdivisions, and in such manner and by such means, as the legislature may from time to 20 time determine.” It further provides that “the protection and promotion of the health of the 21 inhabitants of the state are matters of public concern and provision therefor shall be made by the 22 state and by such of its subdivisions and in such manner, and by such means as the legislature 23 shall from time to time determine.” N.Y. Const., art. XVII, § 1.

24 8. OTDA is authorized to establish rules, regulations, and policies to carry out its 25 powers and duties as established under the Social Services Law (“SSL”). SSL §
 26 20(3)(d). Among its duties is the supervision of local departments of social services and the

1 reimbursement of welfare costs, the advancement of grants of money for welfare purposes, and 2 the administration of a discretionary fund. See SSL § 20(3). The SSL additionally provides 3 OTDA with broad authority to establish rules, regulations, and policies upon which public
 4 assistance and care will be provided within the State. See SSL §17.

5 9. SSL § 17(a)-(b) and (j) provide, in part, that the Commissioner shall “determine the 6 policies and principles upon which public assistance, services, and care shall be provided within the 7 state both by the State itself and by the local governmental units . . . ,” shall “make known his policies
 8 and principles to local social services officials and to public and private institutions and welfare
 9 agencies subject to his regulatory and advisory powers . . . ,” and shall “exercise such other powers
 10 and perform such other duties as may be imposed by law.”

11 10. The Commissioner of OTDA is charged with the responsibility of taking 12 cognizance of the interests of health and welfare of the inhabitants of the State who lack or are 13 threatened with the deprivation of the necessities of life and of all matters pertaining thereto.
 14 SSL § 34(3)(c).

15 11. The local social services districts are charged with the duty, so long as funds are 16 available, to provide adequately for those unable to maintain themselves, in accordance with the 17 requirements and provisions governing assistance and related provisions of the SSL. SSL §
 18 131(1). Local social services districts “shall, whenever possible, administer such care, treatment 19 and service as may restore such person to a condition of self-support or self-care, and shall further 20 give such service to those liable to become destitute as may prevent the necessity of their 21 becoming public charges.” Id.

22 12. In carrying out this duty, OTDA is required to respect family integrity. SSL §
 23 131(3) provides that to the extent possible, families are to be kept together and “shall not be 24 separated for reasons of poverty alone,” and that families shall be provided services which 25 maintain and strengthen family life. SSL § 131(3).

1 13. The Commissioner of OTDA exercises general supervision over the work of all
 2 local welfare authorities, determines the policies and principals upon which public assistance
 3 and care is provided within the State by State and local government units, and establishes
 4 regulations for the administration of public assistance and care by the State and local government
 5 units in accordance with the law. SSL § 34(3)(d); § 34(3)(f).

6 14. Pursuant to SSL § 34(3)(f), OTDA's Commissioner must establish regulations
 7 for the administration of public assistance and care within the State by the districts and by the 8 State itself, in accordance with the law. Pursuant to SSL § 34(6), OTDA's Commissioner "may 9 exercise such additional powers and duties as may be required for the effective administration of the 10 department and of the State system of public aid and assistance."

11 15. In furtherance of its constitutional and statutory obligations, OTDA supervises 12 the administration of several programs by social services districts. These programs include
 13 Public Assistance ("PA"), which includes both Family Assistance ("FA") and Safety Net
 14 Assistance ("SNA"); SNAP; LIHEAP; and components of the Refugee Resettlement Program.
 15 OTDA is also authorized to enter into contracts for purposes of carrying out the Response to 16 Human Trafficking Program ("RHTP"), and the Refugee Resettlement Program. SSL Article 10-17 D, SSL § 358(4).

18 16. The purpose of federally-funded FA is to provide cash assistance to eligible needy 19 families that include a minor child living with a parent (including families where both parents 20 are in the household) or a caretaker relative. FA operates under federal Temporary Assistance
 21 for Needy Families ("TANF") guidelines. For New York State fiscal year 2018-2019, 22 $1,400,000,000 has been appropriated for FA in the New York State budget. Chapter 53 of the 23 Session Laws of New York for 2018. The Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity 24 Reconciliation Act of 1996 ("PRWORA"), provides the block grant funding to states for TANF.
 25 This federal law requires states to operate a public assistance program to "provide assistance to 26 needy families so that children may be cared for in their own homes or in the homes of

1 relatives..." The program provides continuing assistance to needy families with children under 2 the age of 18, or under the age of 19 and regularly attending a secondary school or the equivalent
 3 level of vocational or technical training, who meet the following criteria: (1) the child is living
 4 with caretaker relatives as set forth in 18 N.Y.C.R.R. § 369.1(b); (2) the family meets the 5 categorical eligibility requirements as set forth in 18 N.Y.C.R.R. § 369.2, including citizen or 6 immigration status; and (3) the family meets the financial eligibility requirements as set forth in 7 18 N.Y.C.R.R. § 352. Because federal law restricts eligibility for federally-funded benefits to 8 non-citizens with certain forms of immigration status, one aspect of determining eligibility for 9 FA includes assessing whether an applicant has an appropriate immigration status. Should a 10 child who has been separated from a parent be granted asylum, or another qualified immigration 11 status as set forth in SSL § 122, that child could receive FA, if otherwise eligible.

12 17. SNA is the New York category of PA provided to needy individuals and families 13 who are not eligible for FA. SNA is a State-funded program for which $555,000,000 has been 14 appropriated in the New York State budget for State Fiscal Year 2018-2019. Chapter 53 of the 15 Session Laws of New York for 2018. SNA provides assistance to single adults, childless 16 couples, children living apart from any adult relative, families of persons found to be abusing 17 drugs or alcohol, families of persons refusing drug/alcohol screening, assessment or treatment, 18 persons who have exceeded the 60-month limit on family assistance, and certain non-citizens 19 who are eligible for public assistance, but who are not eligible for federal reimbursement under 20 the family assistance program or who are considered permanently residing in the United States
 21 under color of law. In determining eligibility for SNA, several factors are considered, including 22 an applicant's citizenship or immigration status. The immigration status requirements for SNA
 23 are less restrictive than the eligibility requirements for federally-funded programs. For example,
 24 a child who has an application for asylum pending and has received employment authorization
 25 from the United States Citizenship and Immigration Service, a child who has been granted
 26 deferred action, a child who has been paroled into the United States for less than one year, and a

1 child who is residing in the United States pursuant to an order of supervision under § 241(a)(3)
 2 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”) can receive SNA, if he or she meets program
 3 requirements and other eligibility criteria.

4 18. The purpose of the federally funded SNAP, formerly known in New York as the 5 Food Stamp program, is to reduce hunger and malnutrition by supplementing the food 6 purchasing of eligible low-income individuals and families, including low-income working 7 people, senior citizens, and the disabled. For State Fiscal Year 2018-2019, $400,000,000 has 8 been appropriated in the New York State budget for SNAP. Chapter 53 of the Session Laws of 9 New York for 2018. SNAP eligibility and benefit levels are based on household size, income,
 10 and other factors, including immigration status. Federal law restricts eligibility for federally-11 funded benefits to non-citizens with certain forms of immigration status. Should a child who 12 has been separated from a parent be granted asylum, or another qualified immigration status, that 13 child could receive SNAP benefits, if otherwise eligible. OTDA administers SNAP in New 14 York. SSL §§ 95, 29. OTDA has authority to: (1) develop the required State plans to utilize the 15 Federal Food Stamp Act of 1977, as amended, (2) accept a designation which makes 16 supplemental nutrition assistance benefits available to eligible persons, (3) delegate or assign 17 appropriate functions to other State departments and agencies with the approval of the Governor.
 18 SSL § 95. OTDA, with the approval of the Governor, is further authorized to accept a 19 designation from, and act as the agent of, the duly authorized federal agency in the administration 20 of relief and related activities affecting the welfare of individuals and communities, and the 21 disbursement or expenditure of federal funds and commodities. SSL § 29.

22 19. LIHEAP is a federally-funded block grant program, for which $500,000,000 has 23 been appropriated in the New York State budget for State Fiscal Year 2018-2019. Chapter 53 of 24 the Session Laws of New York for 2018. The block grant is administered by the U.S. Department 25 of Health and Human Services (“HHS”), Office of Community Services (“OCS”) within the 26 Administration for Children and Families (“ACF”). OTDA is authorized to: (1) develop and

1 submit to the Governor the LIHEAP application and plan required by federal law; (2) to take
 2 whatever action may be necessary with respect to the plan; (3) to take action that may be required
 3 to submit, implement, administer, and operate the plan; and (4) to secure for the state the benefits
 4 available under such act. SSL §97. In New York, the federal LIHEAP program is known as 5 HEAP. The program assists eligible low-income individuals, particularly those with the lowest 6 income who pay a high proportion of household income for home energy in meeting their 7 immediate energy needs. Because federal law restricts eligibility for federally-funded benefits 8 to non-citizens with certain forms of immigration status, one aspect of determining eligibility for 9 HEAP includes assessing whether an household members have an appropriate immigration
 10 status. Households that include asylees or individuals with another qualified immigration status, 11 including children separated from parents, who have been granted such status could receive 12 HEAP benefits if otherwise eligible. Should a child who has been separated from a parent be 13 granted asylum, or another qualified immigration status, that child could receive HEAP benefits, 14 if otherwise eligible. In New York, insufficient heating and/or cooling is a health and safety 15 concern that is especially acute in low-income households with members who are elderly, 16 disabled, and/or include children under the age of six. Therefore, New York provides an 17 additional benefit amount to these households.

18 20. The Refugee Resettlement Program provides services to refugees and their 19 families to help them achieve economic and social self-sufficiency. For State Fiscal Year 2018-
 20 2019, $26,000,000 has been appropriated in the New York State budget for the Refugee 21 Resettlement Program. Chapter 53 of the Session Laws of New York for 2018. As a condition 22 of receiving federal funding, states are required to submit a state plan outlining how it proposes 23 to encourage effective refugee resettlement, to promote economic self-sufficiency as quickly as 24 possible, and insure language training and employment services. States are also required to 25 designate a state-employed individual who will be responsible for insuring coordination of public 26

1 and private resources in refugee resettlement. This individual is the State Refugee Coordinator.
 2 8 U.S.C. § 1522; 45 C.F.R. Part 400.

3 21. OTDA was designated by the Governor of New York as the State agency
 4 responsible for developing the Refugee Resettlement Program State Plan, and for administering 5 and supervising the implementation of New York's State Plan. In designating OTDA as the 6 responsible State Agency, the Commissioner of OTDA or his/her designee, was identified as the 7 State Coordinator, with the responsibility and authority to ensure coordination of public and 8 private resources in refugee resettlement in the State. SSL § 358(3); SSL § 358(4).

9 22. The Refugee Resettlement Program serves certain refugees, admitted under § 207
 10 of the INA, asylees granted asylum under § 208 of the INA, Cuban or Haitian Entrants (as 11 defined in subdivision (e) of § 501 of the Refugee Education Assistance Act of 1980), non-12 citizens admitted into the United States as Amerasian Immigrants as described in § 13 402(a)(2)(A)(i)(V) of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 14 1996 (8 U.S.C. §1612(a)(2)(A)(v)), individuals paroled as refugees or asylees under § 212(d)(5)
 15 of the INA, Certified Trafficking Victims who have received a certification or eligibility letter
 16 from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, certain family members of a certified
 17 trafficking victim as described in § 101(A)(15)(T)(ii) of the INA, Iraqis and Afghans Granted
 18 Special Immigrant Status as described in § 101(a)(27) of the INA, and Lawful Permanent 19 Residents, provided that the individual previously held one of the aforementioned statuses.
 20 Children separated from their parents who acquire one of the aforementioned statuses can receive 21 certain Refugee Resettlement Program services, provided that they meet other program 22 eligibility criteria.

23 23. The Refugee Resettlement Program includes a component that provides services
 24 to Unaccompanied Refugee Minors (URM). In addition to non-citizens with the above-25 mentioned statuses, non-citizens who have been granted Special Immigrant Juvenile Status under 26 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(27)(J) or who have been granted U nonimmigrant status under §

1 101(a)(15)(U) of the INA are also eligible for services as URM. If children separated from their 2 parents acquire one of the aforementioned statuses and are reclassified as URM by the Office of 3 Refugee Resettlement, then the children could receive services through this component of the 4 Refugee Resettlement Program. States that provide services to URM must develop and 5 implement an appropriate plan for the care and supervision of, and services provided to, each 6 unaccompanied minor, place the child in a foster home or other setting approved by the legally 7 responsible agency and in accordance with the child's need for care and for social, health, and 8 educational services. Case planning for unaccompanied minors must, at a minimum, address the 9 following elements: (1) family reunification; (2) appropriate placement of the unaccompanied 10 child in a foster home, group foster care, residential facility, supervised independent living, or 11 other setting, as deemed appropriate in meeting the best interest and special needs of the child; 12 (3) health screening and treatment, including provision for medical and dental examinations and 13 for all necessary medical and dental treatment; (4) orientation, testing, and counseling to 14 facilitate the adjustment of the child to American culture; (5) preparation for participation in 15 American society with special emphasis upon English language instruction and occupational as 16 well as cultural training as necessary to facilitate the child's social integration and to prepare the 17 child for independent living and economic self-sufficiency; and (6) preservation of the child's 18 ethnic and religious heritage. States must review the continuing appropriateness of each 19 unaccompanied minor's living arrangement and services no less frequently than every six 20 months. 45 C.F.R. Part 400.

21 24. OTDA enters into contracts with certain entities to provide services to human 22 trafficking victims through the RHTP. RHTP is a State-funded program that has the purpose of 23 assisting human trafficking victims who would not be otherwise eligible for services due to the 24 lack of an appropriate immigration status. SSL § 483-bb. For State Fiscal Year 2018-2019, 25 $397,000 has been appropriated in the New York State budget for RHTP. Chapter 53 of the 26 Session Laws of New York for 2018.

1 25. OTDA has authority to coordinate with and assist law enforcement agencies and 2 prosecutors to access appropriate services for human trafficking victims. SSL § 483-bb. In 3 providing such assistance, OTDA may enter into contracts with non-government organizations 4 for providing services to individuals who have a pending application for federal certification as 5 a victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons as defined in § 7105 of Title 22 of the United 6 States Code, but have not yet obtained such certification, or a person who has reported a crime
 7 to law enforcement and it reasonably appears to law enforcement that the person is such a victim.
 8 To the extent that children separated from their parents are identified as such individuals, State-
 9 funded services could be provided to them. These State-funded services may include, but are 10 not limited to, case management, emergency temporary housing, health care, mental health
 11 counseling, drug addiction screening and treatment, language interpretation and translation
 12 services, English language instruction, job training and placement assistance, post-employment 13 services for job retention, and services to assist the individual and any of his or her family
 14 members to establish a permanent residence in New York or the United States. SSL § 483-bb.

15 26. The Commissioner's ability to administer and oversee the aforementioned 16 policies and programs have been and continues to be adversely impacted by the challenged
 17 Trump Administration policy to forcibly separate families.

18 27. The challenged policy acts as a barrier to the release of the affected parents and 19 children. Some of those who will be released in New York could be eligible for OTDA programs 20 and services. Therefore, the challenged policy is preventing OTDA from carrying out its 21 constitutional and statutorily-mandated obligations to assist needy non-citizen families.

28. The challenged Trump Administration policy to forcibly separate families fundamentally contradicts the principles set forth in the New York State Constitution and Social Services Law.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the States of New York and Washington and the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, et al.,

DECLARATION OF JEAN CHEN IN
DISCOVERY

Defendants.

I, Jean Chen, declare as follows:

1. I am a resident of the State of California. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein. If called as a witness, I could and would testify competently to the matters set forth below.

2. I am currently employed by the California Department of Social Services (CDSS), and have been since 1996. I currently serve as the Program Administrator for the department's Children's Residential Program, directing program policies and overseeing field operations statewide. Before assuming my current role, I served as the Assistant Program Administrator for the Children's Residential Program from 2012-2018.

3. CDSS is one of sixteen departments and offices within the California Health and Human Services Agency and is responsible for the oversight and administration of programs serving California's most vulnerable residents. Our mission is to serve, aid, and

1 protect needy and vulnerable children and adults in ways that strengthen and preserve families,
 2 encourage personal responsibility, and foster independence. CDSS employs at least four 3 thousand two hundred (4,200) individuals in forty-one offices throughout California.

4 4. I am responsible for oversight of the Children's Residential Program within the 5 Community Care Licensing Division of CDSS.

6 Community Care Licensing Division

7 5. Community Care Licensing's (CCL) mission is to promote the health, safety, 8 and quality of life of each person in community care through the administration of an effective
 9 and collaborative regulatory enforcement system. In support of this mission, CCL oversees 10 and regulates child care facilities and residential facilities for children and adults. The 11 Children's Residential Program is headquartered in Sacramento, California, and maintains five 12 regional offices with seven local units throughout the State.

13 6. CCL licenses facilities used as placement options for children who are no longer 14 under the care of a parent, and has regulatory oversight of the residential facilities for such 15 children in California. As part of our licensing responsibilities, we license group homes, and 16 foster family agencies that certify or approve homes to provide care of children placed in these 17 homes. Dependent children have statutory and regulatory personal rights; rights to fair and 18 equal access to all available services, placements, care, treatment, and benefits; and the right to 19 not be subjected to discrimination or harassment on the basis of actual or perceived race, ethnic 20 group identification, ancestry, national origin, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender 21 identity, mental or physical disability or HIV status. In its role, CCL is responsible for 22 ensuring the health, safety, and welfare of children in out-of-home care facilities. CCL has 23 three main functions: preventing predictable harm to people in care, ensuring compliance with 24 applicable laws and regulations, and enforcing any necessary corrective actions.

25 7. CCL's oversight of children's residential placements covers all facilities used 26 for this purpose in California, including those facilities who have contacts with the Office of 1 Refugee Resettlement (ORR) to house unaccompanied immigrant children in California.

 2 Licensing functions include complaint investigations, inspections, processing applications,
 3 providing technical assistance, and pursuing administrative actions, such as revocations of 4 licenses and exclusions of individuals from licensed facilities. State laws and regulations favor 5 placing children with families over congregate care.

6 8. In California, licensed facilities are subject to regular inspection by State staff to 7 ensure compliance with standards relating to care and supervision, personal rights, criminal 8 background checks, building and grounds, and other matters such as food and required care 9 provider first aid and CPR training. Children's residential facilities licensed by CCL are 10 inspected on a biennial basis, if not more frequently due to monitoring plans of correction or 11 probationary licenses, complaint investigations, or conducting random inspections. The State,
 12 or the county in the case of a county approved home, has authority to deny, suspend, or revoke
 13 a license or approval to protect children in care. California's standards also require specified 14 training for care providers in our licensed facilities and homes, and require sufficient staffing 15 to meet the care and needs of the children in their care.

16 9. ORR has contracts with two types of providers licensed by CCL: group homes 17 and foster family agencies. The foster family agencies certify or approve family homes that 18 provide care for children placed with them. Not all group homes or foster family agencies
 19 have contracts with ORR. Group homes, and homes certified by foster family agencies are 24-20 hour, residential, non-medical, placement options for children. They are not allowed to be 21 locked.

22 10. Given the recent events and hearing that children separated from their families
 23 as a result of the "zero tolerance" policy have been placed at licensed facilities in California, 24 CCL attempted to determine which licensed group homes and foster family agencies have 25 contracts with ORR, so that it could reinspect these facilities and homes to ensure there were 26 no immediate health or safety concerns. CCL's present understanding of facilities under CCL's

1 jurisdiction is that there are a combination of seventeen (17) licensed group homes, and four
2 (4) foster family agencies with ORR contracts, providing placements for approximately 51
3 (fifty-one) minors separated from their families. CCL does not maintain a census of children
4 detained by ORR nor maintain a list of licensed providers that have contracts with ORR. We 5 are trying to confirm whether this is a complete inventory of ORR contracted facilities.

6 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California and the United
7 States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

STATE OF WASHINGTON, et al.,

NO. 2:18-cv-00939

Plaintiff,

V.

DONALD TRUMP in his official capacity
as President of the United States, et al.,

DECLARATION OF RUBEN
REEVES IN SUPPORT OF STATES' MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY
INJUNCTION

Defendants.

I, RUBEN REEVES, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18 and have personal knowledge of all the facts stated herein.

2. I have been employed by the Washington State Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS) for over 21 years. Within DSHS, I am currently the acting Deputy Statewide Administrator in the Children's Administration for the Division of Licensed Resources (DLR). DLR oversees, among other things, the licensing of Washington's overnight group care facilities, including group homes and youth care centers, as well as licensing of all agencies that care for children outside their homes.

3. My job duties and responsibilities include providing managerial and clinical guidance and leadership to Area Administrators and Program Managers in all areas of DLR (including but not limited to child safety, family engagement, and child well-being) and for ensuring that each field office and program under their authority complies with applicable laws,

1 regulations and policies and procedures. I also provide extensive leadership in the strategic 2 planning for statewide programs, initiatives and activities.

3 4. DSHS is statutorily directed to safeguard the health, safety and well-being of 4 children by ensuring that agencies (as defined in RCW 74.15.020) meet the minimum standards
 5 for the care of children.

6 5. DSHS oversees the licensing, inspection, and monitoring of providers who care
 7 for children away from their parents. Pursuant to RCW 74.15.030, DSHS is authorized to 8 establish minimum licensing requirements for these agencies and individuals, and to issue 9 licenses and regulate the licensure of these childcare facilities.

10 6. Specifically, pursuant to RCW 74.15.090, any agency under RCW 74.15.020 that 11 cares for children on a 24-hour basis away from their parents must be licensed. Under RCW
 12 74.15.080, all agencies subject to licensure “shall accord the department of social and health 13 services … the right of entrance and the privilege of access to and inspection of records for the 14 purpose of determining whether or not there is compliance with [licensing
 15 requirements].” These provisions are consistent with the declared intent of chapter 74.15 RCW, 16 which is to protect and promote the health, safety and well-being of children receiving care away
 17 from home. RCW 74.15.010. An agency is granted a group care license only after it, its staff, 18 and property meet the licensing regulations, and all required documents are in the licensing file.
 19 WAC 388-145-1315.

20 7. The licensing requirements for group homes and overnight youth shelters are 21 provided in ch. 388-145 WAC. Many of the licensing requirements impose requirements that 22 are intended to promote the wellbeing of children in the care of these agencies, regardless of 23 whether they are also in the state’s custody. For example, WAC 388-145-1350 states: “The 24 department must have access to your facility, staff, and the children in your care at any time. You
 25 must allow us to meet privately with staff or children in your care, at our request.” This mandate

1 allows state licensing officers to privately inquire of the children or staff about the care delivered 2 at the agency.

3 8. Likewise, WAC 388-145-1335(3) requires all licensed group care facilities that 4 care for more than five children to meet state health and safety requirements. For example, they 5 must obtain a certificate of compliance from the Washington State Department of Health and 6 comply with fire safety requirements from the Washington State Patrol fire protection bureau.

7 9. DSHS also assesses, as part of licensure, whether the staff in group care facilities
8 have the ability, physical health, and emotional stability necessary to meet the needs of children
9 in the facility's care. WAC 388-145-1330(4). Before issuing a license, the DSHS licensor
10 assesses the facility's ability to provide a safe environment for children and to provide the quality 11 of care they need. WAC 388-145-1330(7). These licensing regulations are designed to ensure 12 children in group care facilities are safe, healthy and protected from all forms of child abuse and 13 neglect according to RCW 26.44.020(1) and chapter 388-15 WAC. WAC 388-145-1300.

14 10. As of today's date, there are 144 licensed group care facilities across the state.
15 This number includes facilities that contract with the state to care for foster children who are in 16 the state's custody, as well as state-licensed facilities that care for children who are not in the 17 state's custody, such as those that contract with ORR to care for unaccompanied minors in 18 ORR's custody.

19 11. I am aware that as of June 22, 2018, at least 9 children in federal ORR custody 20 were placed in state-licensed group care facilities in Washington State following separation from 21 their parents.

22 12. I am aware that one of these private agencies issued a statement confirming that 23 it operates group care facilities that are currently caring for children in ORR custody who were 24 separated from their families.

25 13. Washington State DSHS has a statutory mandate under RCW 74.13.031(2) to 26 recruit and retain adequate placement resources for children in foster care in the state's custody.

1 If additional placement resources are deflected away from foster children in the state's custody
2 in favor of contracts with the federal government to care for children in ORR custody, this is 3 likely to adversely impact the Department's mandate to safeguard the health, safety, and well-
4 being of these children.

5 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of Washington and the 6 United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.
